SUMMER, 1885.

MANTLE DEPARTMENT.—The reigning fashion for this spring will be garments somewhat small, light in texture, with bead and jet trimmings. Our first consignments will, during this week, be opened out, and a glance at our invoices reveals the fact that in this Department we shall be prepared with an assortment as beautiful as vast. The world of fashion is always more or less moved by the style of garment which takes so prominent a place in a lady's attire as does the mantle, and the leaders and designers of fashion doubtless find their efforts somewhat taxed; but this season's goods go to show that those efforts, so far as the spring of '85 is concerned, have been fruitful to an unprecedented extent.

We ask attention to a very pretty Mantilla of gaze parlée, trimmed lace and jet ornaments. Prices from 45s. Our richest goods of this order range up to 10 guineas, and are models of beauty.

In gauze velour our stock is very large, and comprises Mantles, Mantillas, and Fichus of every conceivable design worn this season. Prices, 55s, 75s, 84s, 94s 6d, &c.

The new Canvas Cloth is certain to be in demand, and in this department will hold no second place. Our assortment is very extensive, whilst prices are remarkably economical. We are showing nice seasonable garments in this class from 50s.

Cashmere Frise in black and colours, in Mantles and Mantillas, 37s 6d to 90s.

The Masher Shape in Satin Merveilleux and Curl Cloth, trimmed lace, silk, and satin, 37s 6d to 42s.

SUMMER, 1885.

MILLINERY.—Never in the history of Victoria House have we been so fully prepared for a new season's trade in this department as we are to-day. HAIR-DRESSING has been, and still is, attracting much attention, and, consequently, HEAD-DRESSING has, in its turn, to provide for the partisans of different styles, all alike popular, yet, of course, with divided favour as to adoption. This fact has certainly been borne in mind by our buyer for this season's show, for for variety in style we have never witnessed anything so full of varied novelty. To expatiate at any length is not now our purpose; we prefer our patrons to favour us with a call of inspection. WE HAVE A STOCK OF UNTRIMMED STRAW GOODS fresh from the manufactories, which will certainly command attention, whilst to the connoisseurs of Paris and London novelties we have an exhibition which will safely be regarded as the sunshine of exquisite taste, and be pronounced simply charming.

The leading novelties are, to some extent, known as the Clara, Soleil, Polichenelle, Princess of Wales, Cervantes Chapeau, &c., and will be found both becoming and stylish. Tastefully trimmed, prices ranging from 21s only.

STRAW HATS for children are, we note, very choice. Shapes for this season most in demand are Sailor, Witch, Olivia, &c.

FLOWERS, WREATHS, BOUQUETS, &c., in endless variety.

SUMMER, 1885.

NEW DRESS MATERIALS.—SPECIAL TO LADIES.—The most attractive show of these goods this season in Sydney will undoubtedly be at Victoria House. The position we have for so many years had the honour to occupy as Importers is in itself a guarantee for much that otherwise we might have to say, but for an important consignment such as this now placed before the public, it will suffice to remark that for variety and value it stands unrivalled in Australia. CLOTHING FOR INFANTRY RESERVE FORCES.

TENDERS will be received at this office until noon of the 20th October, 1885, for supply of Undress Uniforms to the members of the Metropolitan and Western District, Southern District, and Northern District Reserve Forces of Infantry.
Specification and pattern suit to be seen, and other particulars obtained on application at this office.
Tenders to be endorsed "Tender for Infantry Reserve Clothing."
The contract will be for one year from date of acceptance, and for any number of uniforms that may be ordered from time to time by the officer duly authorised to do so. The articles will be cap, drill jacket, and trousers, according to sealed pattern, to be made in the best manner in respect to cut, fit, and workmanship. Each member shall be separately measured and fitted.
Every suit shall be made to the satisfaction of the inspecting officer, and no payment shall be made for any uniform without such approval.
The contractor's accounts will be settled monthly as soon as the vouchers can be completed after the end of each month.
At the foot of every tender there must be a memorandum signed by the party tendering, and two responsible persons as sureties, agreeing to be answerable for the due performance of the contract, in the event of the tender being accepted and undertaking in that event, that they will severally execute and deliver within fourteen days from the usual notification of acceptance a bond in the penal sum of £300 for securing such performance, otherwise the tender will not be taken into consideration.
In the event of any failure or unnecessary delay on the part of the contractor in supplying the uniforms as required, it shall be within the power of the officer commanding to procure the required uniform suit, or suits, from other persons; and the cost of any articles so procured shall be charged to the contractor, and deducted from any money due or to become due to him under this contract.
Should the contractor at any time supply articles not approved, the same shall be replaced by others of proper quality; and by repetition of such irregularity on the part of the contractor, it shall be competent for the board, at a meeting held for that purpose, to entirely take the contract out of his hands, and employ other persons to complete the same.

WILLIAM DAY,
Returning-officer.

East Sydney, October 9th, 1885.

TO THE ELECTORS OF EAST SYDNEY.

Gentlemen,—The recent dissolution of Parliament affords me a welcome opportunity of submitting my conduct to your judgment. In again addressing you, my pleasure is in proportion to the consideration which you have extended to me during nearly three years, a consideration which you will permit me to interpret as in perfect accord with the kindly confidence which at the last general election placed me in so honourable a position. Your good opinion of me was promptly endorsed by the then incoming Parliament, which on the day of its meeting conferred upon me the distinguished honour of the Speakership. I am not aware that this confirmation of your choice has in its consequences led to anything but a continuance of your esteem. Opinions may differ as to the degree of ability with which I have presided over the elected House. They cannot—if in all modesty I may say so—differ as to the impartiality with which I have so presided; and, if this assertion needs proof, I have no hesitation in invoking the testimony of the prominent members of all parties in that House. I now ask you to say by your votes that Parliament has been justified in its choice, and that to the best of my humble powers I have done my duty to my country and its highest institutions.

A member of the recently dissolved Parliament, disagreeing with me in opinion as to the propriety of my action upon a certain occasion, appealed to the distinguished leader of the great Liberal party in England. Mr. Gladstone, whose Parliamentary experience of over half a century gives peculiar value to his opinion, used the following language in his reply:—"A Speaker in no way renounces his political creed, or any of its articles; but he places the practical application of it largely in abeyance, on the principle, as I suppose, that he more effectively serves all portions of the nation, including his own party, by promoting in the chair the efficiency of the House of Commons in general, than by a purely personal action, more directly connected with his opinions, but lying within a narrower and lower sphere." Gentlemen, I hope I may claim with some confidence that my action as Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of this colony has been in entire accordance with the principle thus clearly formulated. I venture to believe that you will credit me with having done somewhat to "promote in the chair the efficiency of the House in general," and with having abstained from any "purely personal action" which might have lowered the dignity or dimmed the lustre of the high office given to my keeping. In the same letter Mr. Gladstone thus describes the relations which should subsist between a Speaker and his electorate during his tenure of office:—"The constituency of a Speaker is no doubt entitled to call upon him, as any other constituency is entitled to call upon any other member, in what pertains to his direct relations with them; but this power is commonly exercised with much consideration and reserve." It is with no meaningless words that I thank you, gentlemen, for your perfect appreciation of the delicate and arduous nature of my duties, and for the "consideration and reserve" which have prompted you to abstain from imposing tasks upon me which might have rendered the successful performance of those duties difficult if not impracticable.

Mr. Gladstone continues his letter in these words:—"I have never known a case of a Speaker rejected at the poll when seeking re-election to the Chair." If you on the one hand, and I on the other, have understood, and in our conduct illustrated, the principles which the great statesman has enunciated in words so impressive and so clear, then, gentlemen, I trust that you will have no hesitation in verifying his estimate of the right conduct of a constituency in such circumstances. And if the course which, as he states, is sanctioned by the highest precedents, commends itself to your judgment, I decline to doubt your generosity, nor can I fear the result of the exercise of your suffrages.

Yours faithfully,
EDMUND BARTON.

ELECTORS OF EAST SYDNEY.

Mr. GEORGE BROWN
is a candidate.

Encouragement of our Manufactures, Industries, and Employment for the People.
R. G. TEMETT, Secretary.

TO THE ELECTORS OF EAST SYDNEY.

Gentlemen,—I shall, at the forthcoming General Election, again seek the honour of being returned as one of your four representatives. Since the 1882 election I have steadily studied and advocated the interests of the colony generally and our electorate.

As a business man, and recognising the necessity for good and prompt legislation, I have, on principle, abstained from impeding business by either long speeches or factious opposition.

Sitting on the cross benches, I have voted fearlessly for all good measures and without regard to party politics. Should you again do me the honour to return me I shall adopt the same course.

I deeply regret that the Stuart Ministry, previous to prorogation, did not press on the adoption of the City Railway plans which had lain on the table of the Assembly the due time. I advocate this proposed line as the only one at present possible, in view of the restricted area of the business portion of this city, and the enormous cost, owing to necessary resumptions, of any other scheme.

I heartily applauded the Hon. W. B. Dalley's patriotic action in sending the Contingent to Egypt, in proof of our recognition of the claims of the mother country to our help in any time of need, and as an assertion of our right to be considered an integral portion of the British Empire. If we disassociate ourselves from England before a powerful federation of the Australasian States is established, occupying and able to defend the whole seaboard of Australia, England would not be called upon to engage in hostilities with any nation which may see fit to found (perhaps convict) settlements on the at present uninhabited lands to the north and north-west of this vast island continent.

Much as we rightly deplore the great nations of Europe founding convict colonies in Polynesia, the seizure by a foreign Power of any portion of the territory of this Australian island would be of incalculably greater damage to us, and is a calamity we, with our limited means and population, would be powerless to resist if we were without England's aid and protection.

At last election I expressed strong views in favour of a revision of the then existing Land Laws—indicating on what lines such revision should proceed. When the Stuart-Farnell Land Bill was brought forward in the late Parliament I voted, after much hesitation, for its second reading; but when I found that, after passing through Committee, the Bill, notwithstanding all efforts to amend it, still contained so many glaring and radical defects I felt it to be my conscientious duty to vote against it on the third reading.

When the Licensing Amendment Act was under discussion in April-May, 1883, I opposed those arbitrary clauses which prevent the citizens of large towns obtaining necessary refreshment on Sundays. Here, as in other countries, there must be special legislation to regulate the liquor traffic, but this legislation, whilst aiming to promote the sobriety of the public, must not harshly interfere with the legitimate trade of respectable citizens.

If elected, the Local Government Bill and the Health Bill shall have my hearty support. Without committing myself to approval of all the details of such elaborate measures, I say I desire to see our Statute Book enriched by Acts calculated to provide efficiently for the local management and construction of roads, bridges, and other works necessary to the developement of our great inland districts. The Shires' Act in Victoria, and the Divisional Boards Act in Queensland, have shown us how local self-government is both possible and advantageous to the general community.

The condition of sewerage and drainage in our great city and suburbs, and the deaths and illnesses clearly attributable to want of proper sanitary legislation, render the consideration of the Health Bill by Parliament a subject of first consideration, having prior claims to any other measure.

The anomalies and injustices which are now found to exist so soon as the recently passed Civil Service Act has been brought into operation need rectification, and the claims of those Civil servants who are unfairly treated shall have my earnest attention and advocacy.

When Mr. Dibbs brought forward the "Railway Loan" I opposed and voted against those which could not be clearly shown to be for the general advantage of the colony. I have nothing to regret in what I then did, and I shall offer strenuous opposition to all railway lines which cannot be proved capable, either at once or in the near future, of paying some fair return on the capital after deducting cost of maintenance and working expenses.

The long recess has so delayed public business that after attention to the Financial Statement, the next session is likely to be fully occupied in consideration of above matters; but I am fully alive to the necessity for amending the Bankruptcy Act and to the great questions of City Water Supply, Wharfage Improvements, Public Parks, Abattoirs, Settlement of Noxious Trades Question, &c., &c., on which matters I shall address you personally.

The "personnel" of the new Ministry is, to my mind, no fit subject for inclusion in the address of one who seeks election as an independent member. The Ministry shall have my support in passing good and useful measures and in the despatch of public business. As attempts are being made to introduce a policy of protection into New South Wales, I must again avow myself a pronounced and sincere believer in free trade doctrines.

Your obedient servant,
G. N. GRIFFITHS.

TO THE ELECTORS OF WEST SYDNEY.

Gentlemen,—At the request of a large circle of friends I have consented to become a candidate for one of the seats now vacant in the representation of West Sydney in the Parliament of the colony. In doing so, I do not desire to pose as that heaven-born politician who is to solve the political problems of the day, but rather as one who, from a long residence in the colony, has gained a knowledge of its requirements.

I have already served you for a period of six years in the City Council, and have always endeavoured to do my duty honestly and fearlessly, regardless of consequences to myself.

I do not propose to enter into detail in reference to the action that I have taken in what I conceived to be the true interest of the citizens, but shall at once lay before you a summary of the political programme which I shall base my candidature on, which I shall enlarge at the various meetings called on my behalf previous to the election.

In reference to land reform, I am opposed to the wholesale alienation of the public estate, and believe the creation of large landed properties a mistake. The present Land Act, although not favourable to the whole of its principles, I am in favour of giving a fair trial.

I am strongly opposed to the present Licensing Act, as it is oppressive and tyrannical in its operation, and opposed to the true spirit of liberty.

I am in favour of a fiscal policy that will give encouragement to the investment of capital and the introduction of machinery in the development of the resources and industries of the colony.

I am in favour of extending the municipal franchise to the householders, the extension of railways, and the conservation of water, and shall always be prepared to give an energetic support to any Government who will firmly deal with the questions local Government and the public health.

I shall stand as an independent candidate, pledged to no party; and should you honour me by electing me as one of your representatives, I shall always be found supporting such measures as will be conducive to the best interests of the colony.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Yours, &c.,

WEST SYDNEY ELECTION.

TO THE ELECTORS.

Gentlemen,—When I consider the many entreaties I have had to allow myself to be again nominated for your Electorate, the numerous kind offers of support, and the meeting of my friends, the attendance at which at such an inconvenient hour for most of you assured me of the support and confidence of a large and influential section of the electors, and finally, the determination of that meeting to return me at very little personal expense, I cannot refrain from thus publicly thanking you for your kindness, your unflinching confidence in me and my political principles, and for the honour which you wished to confer upon me.

I regret very much that my health, now almost restored by travel (at the sacrifice of my business), might again suffer by my entering so quickly upon such a contest as an election for such a large constituency as West Sydney involves. Were it not so I would be very glad at this great crisis in the history of the colony to place whatever ability and experience I might have at your disposal, believing that you now appreciate my action at the last election in contending for principles which would have been infinitely more serviceable to the colony than those which now prevail, as I fear the country is fast learning at great cost. I sacrificed my last election by opposing a land measure which was to have given the land to the people, but which I warned you would have the contrary effect. Deserted by many professed friends and unaided by any outside influence, you supported me and recorded in my favour a number of votes which, under the circumstances, I considered the greatest victory I had ever gained.

I would have liked to assist in raising the moral tone and clearing the atmosphere of our Parliamentary institutions, into which I fear is stealthily creeping a spirit which is demoralising, and yet natural to some, which finds a name in "the Tammany Ring." I would venture so far as to make it penal for any representative and keeper of the sacred rights of the people to receive a shilling directly or indirectly in the capacity of agent, except what is directly and legally defined. It behoves the people of this city and colony now at this election to discriminate and closely scrutinise every candidate; and, notwithstanding plausibility and promises, reject any man to whom a suspicion of such conduct attaches. You will thus serve yourselves and future generations by immediately elevating the tone of public life. Again thanking you for your numerous influential promises of support,

I am, &c.,
W. FRASER MARTIN.

ELECTORS OF SOUTH SYDNEY.

Gentlemen,—Three years ago you returned me to Parliament on a thoroughly well-defined platform, the great question at that time being the amendment of the Land laws of the colony, on the lines laid down by the present Sir Alexander Stuart, based to a great extent on the views previously promulgated by that experienced authority on the Land question, Mr. Thomas Garrett. The Land Act of 1861, as you are aware, has been swept away, and for it substituted the one we now have, which, though by no means perfect, is far and away the better of the two measures. I also at that time assured you that I would do my best to get the Licensing Act amended in several particulars, and seeing how many other members were pledged to assist in this matter, I had strong hopes of success. Not at my door must lie the charge of failure in the attempt, but at that of the House itself, which, when once comfortably seated, forgot altogether the promises so largely contributed to its constitution. I also expressed myself in favour of reform in the Civil Service, of Local Government Bill, and of several other matters, and I claim that in every instance I have redeemed the pledges I then gave you. I have given the Stuart Government a fair and consistent support, though regretting that amongst their number there should have been one or two who should never have been allowed to hold or retain a portfolio. On the Soudan question my actions will speak for me; it is now a thing of the past. I approved of it, and still approve of it, believing that in more ways than one it has proved of infinite advantage to this country; but as it has no more to do with this general election than the burning of Rome, or Noah's flood, I do not further refer to the matter. As to what my course in the future will be, I would simply state that such a reconstruction of the Ministry as appears to be contemplated most certainly relieves me of all obligations to them, and I must assuredly know of whom it is to be composed before I commit myself to their support in any way. Affairs political have now come to such a pass that without the formation of a strong third party led by able and trustworthy leaders, it will be found that Government is an impossibility. Such a party I trust to see in full force in the next Parliament, when local self-government, proper sewerage, a measure for the better protection of the public health, amendment of the Civil Service Act, amendment of the Land Act, amendment of the Licensing Laws, amendment of the Patent Act, amendment of the Insolvency Act, together with more control and supervision of the Public Works Department, may be reasonably anticipated. On your approval of my past conduct must depend, I know, the question as to whether you will trust in my hands a re-representation of your electoral interests. I claim to come before you with clean hands, and I confidently rely on the spirit of fair play and justice ever exhibited by the electors of South Sydney to have once more conferred upon me the highest honour it is in your power to bestow.

Believe me, Gentlemen,
Yours faithfully
J. B. OLLIFFE.

Royal Hyde Park Hotel,
Bathurst and Elizabeth streets, October 1, 1885.

WORKING MEN AND FELLOW ELECTORS OF SOUTH SYDNEY.

As working men of the railway, we consider we would be very ungrateful to Mr. Olliffe, and very unjust to all you, the working men of the South Sydney electorate, if we should allow this great struggle, in which all of us are so deeply interested, to pass by without laying before you, as fellow working men, a few of the many noble and memorable services Mr. Olliffe has rendered us, the working men of the railway, during the time he has so honourably been our representative.

He has got from the late Minister for Works 6d a day increase in our wages; he has got for us all holidays given to the Civil servants; he has got for us half-pay in cases of accident, and other valuable benefits heretofore unknown to us in connection with our Sick and Accident Club. He has incessantly advocated the adoption of the eight-hour system where it was not already in use. If any grievance should exist, the humblest of us can report it to Mr. Olliffe, and he will at once get it removed; nor has he ever refused to hear our grievances, but on all occasions told us that he was elected in the interest of the working man, and for that interest he would labour to the end.

As a recognition of this self-sacrifice and these untiring efforts by Mr. Olliffe in our behalf, every honest man in the Railway will give him (Mr. Olliffe) his vote and support; and we call upon every other working man in South Sydney, who has a duty to discharge not only to himself but to his fellow-workmen in New South Wales, to vote for Mr. Olliffe. Contrast the actions of such a man with those of others seeking your suffrages, and who no doubt will now have great promises, but who would make their men work 10 hours for 6s. How can such men be conscientious advocates of eight hours? We say, "Stick with us your own interests, and return him whom we have tried—Mr. Olliffe."

TO THE ELECTORS OF SOUTH SYDNEY

Gentlemen,—I beg to solicit your vote at the ensuing election for South Sydney. The maladministration of the Government, and the intended expenditure on a number of new lines of railway, the working of which must entail an enormous annual loss on the country if they are constructed, are the principal operating causes that have determined me to offer my services to you as one of your representatives. There are other questions of great importance that will have to be dealt with by the ensuing Parliament, to which I have given full consideration. I am in favour of a fiscal policy that will foster colonial industries. I am in favour of local option under necessary restrictions, but hold that compensation is due to those disturbed in their business. I am opposed to importing labour with general funds, because it is unjust to the sellers of labour. I am opposed to members of Parliament interviewing Ministers when fees or commissions are charged for such services. I am in favour of an Act to define the proportion of interest that Ministers and members of Parliament may hold in limited liability companies without violating the Constitution. I am an advocate for payment of members, as I believe the masses cannot be fairly represented without it. I am in favour of a liberal Patent Law, in which the fees shall not exceed the actual cost. I am in favour of making primary education free, and charging advanced education with its full cost. I am in favour of a Local Government Act, to be compulsory over the whole colony. I will be prepared to support such amendments in the Land Act as have for their objects to facilitate permanent settlement, to equalise the rents charged to all classes of occupiers alike, and to secure a fair rent by a stock assessment or tax. I will explain my reasons for and against these various measures at the meetings to be held throughout the electorate.

Having retired from active business, I have ample time to carry out the duties of a representative, and hope you may think I am possessed of sufficient intelligence to grasp the various questions that may arise, and sufficient honesty to vote for the general good, regardless of selfish ends.

I am,
Yours truly,
A. FORSYTH.

METROPOLITAN QUARTER SESSIONS.

SATURDAY.

(Before Mr. District Court Judge MURRAY.)

The sittings of the Metropolitan Quarter Sessions were continued at Darlinghurst Courthouse on Saturday, before Judge Murray. Mr. Healy appeared on behalf of the Crown. The business which was for disposal consisted of the hearing of appeals against magisterial decisions.

In the matter of John Fullin, who appealed against a conviction for assault, the conviction was affirmed, and the payment of £5 5s costs was ordered to be made within 14 days. Mr. Williamson appeared for the appellant.

In the matter of Isabella M'Elinney, an appeal against a conviction under the Licensing Act, the case was held over.

In the matter of Edward Cook, an appeal under the Deserted Wives Act, the order for maintenance was varied from £4 to £2 10s. per week from the present time. Mr. Field (instructed by Mr. Hill) appeared for the appellant; Mr. Greer for the respondent.

The matter of Alfred Clarke, embezzlement, was postponed until the ensuing sessions, and the recognizances were enlarged. Mr. Williamson was for the appellant, Mr. Lowe for the respondent.

The matter of Mary Carter, or Feeney, a conviction under the Vagrant Act, was similarly disposed of. Mr. Williamson for the appellant; Mr. Pitcairn for the respondent.

In re Henry Williams, the case was an appeal against the decision of Mr. G. W. F. Addison, S.M., given at the Water Police Court, wherein the appellant was convicted under the by-laws of 1876, made in pursuance of the Public Vehicles' Act of 1873. The appellant had been fined 5s., with 5s. cost of court, with the usual alternative. He now appealed under the 440th and following sections of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which stated that "in all cases of summary conviction the person convicted may appeal to the next Court of General Sessions to be appointed for the district wherein the cause of complaint arose," and specified what persons, and within what period of time, notices of such appeal should be served. The grounds of the appeal were—1st. That the conviction was bad in law. 2nd. That the evidence did not support the conviction. 3rd. That Mr. Addison, the convicting justice, declined to hear, and did not hear, witnesses who were tendered, and who could have repudiated the charge; and, 4th, that the officer of the Transit Department, Mr. Oram, did not produce his appointment as inspector of licensed vehicles. Mr. Richards appeared for the appellant; Mr. Nash, instructed by Mr. George Merriman, for the respondent. Mr. Nash took the preliminary objection that the 440th clause of the Criminal Law Amendment Act only possessed a limited application; that was to say, to the cases of summary jurisdiction made punishable under that Act; and that by 5 William IV., chap. 22, sec. 3, a special means of appeal was pointed out, and had not been followed in the present case. After hearing Mr. Richards in reply, his Honor held that as to the first objection by Mr. Nash, the appellant was not compelled to go to the Supreme Court for a prohibition, but that he had a right of appeal; and on the second point that the appeal should have been made under the statute mentioned by Mr. Nash; as he held that the appeal taken by the appellant under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, did not apply, except to convictions under the last-mentioned statute. On the application of the solicitor for the appellant, he offered that if on Monday Mr. Richards could satisfy him that he had power to cite a case for the Supreme Court, he would willingly do so. He declined to allow any costs, and the appeal was therefore dismissed, subject to the stating of a case.

The matters of Lucas and of M'Donald have been set down for hearing to-day (Monday).

He now pleaded guilty, and was fined £5 with 5s. costs, or two months' imprisonment. Thomas Waterhouse, 40, of St. Leonards, appeared, on warrant, to answer a charge preferred against him by Ann Graham of having left his illegitimate female child without means of support. Mr. T. M. Williamson appeared for the complainant. An order was made for the payment of 7s. 6d. per week for twelve months, with £1 9s. 4d. costs. Richard Penhall, 25, a painter, was charged, on remand, with stealing three pictures, value £2, the property of Alfred Allen. Prisoner pleaded guilty, and previous convictions for stealing, aggravated assault, &c., having been proved against him, he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.

At the WATER POLICE COURT on Friday, before Mr. L. Yates, D.S.M., the usual number of offenders were fined for drunkenness and use of bad language. Thomas Bennis was sent to prison for two months, for stealing two pairs of trousers, the property of R. J. Dunford, Oxford-street. Thomas Cochrane obtained a similar sentence for assaulting a constable, while endeavouring to arrest a female prisoner. Matthew Flemming was sentenced to one month for having four gold brooches, nine gold earings, and other jewellery in his possession, which he was supposed to have stolen. William Masters was sentenced to two months' imprisonment for a similar offence. Several cases were also heard in the Summons Court. David Leese was fined £1 5s. 6d., with the alternative of seven days' imprisonment, for a breach of the Stock Act regulations. Aug. J. Corney sued Thomas M'Gregor for £15 for wages. It appeared that defendant purchased a vessel which Corney was acting on as ship-keeper at 10s per day. It was claimed by plaintiff that the defendant agreed with Mr. Martin, one of the former owners of the vessel, to employ Carney at the same rate of wages. The defendant could not remember having made any such agreement, although he was not prepared to contradict Mr. Martin's statement. Judgment was given for the amount claimed, with costs, amounting to £2 16s. Mr. Inspector Oram appeared to prosecute in 27 cases for breaches of the Metropolitan Transit Commissioners' by-laws. Fines, varying from 10s. to £2, were imposed, after which the Court adjourned.

At the BALMAIN POLICE COURT on Friday, before Mr. W. Johnson, S.M., W. Woolf, baker, of Darling-street, was fined £15 5s., with 26s. 6d. costs, or one month in gaol, on the information of James W. Evans, inspector of weights and measures, for having in his possession, and being discovered in his bakehouse, 16 2-lb. and eight 4-lb. loaves of bread, which were deficient in weight on the average of the whole weight of the loaves 61oz.; and Charles Kestle, baker, for selling one 4-lb. loaf, which was deficient in its due weight 4½oz., was fined 40s. with 5s. 6d. costs, levy and distress, or 14 days' gaol. — Young, a South Sea Islander, was committed for trial at the next Court of Quarter Sessions, to be held on the 2nd November next, for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of T. Bromfield, Wharf-road, Balmain, and stealing therein one pound one shilling and a suit of clothes, the property of one Dennis, a native of the Hebrides.

CORONER'S INQUESTS.

An inquest was held on Saturday afternoon at the Parramatta Hospital, by Mr. J. E. Bowden, coroner for the district, on the body of a young man named Thomas Varnicoat, aged 17 years, who died early that morning from injuries received while shunting trucks at Hudsons' works, Clyde, the previous Wednesday evening. It appeared that the deceased, who was employed as a labourer at Hudsons' works, was assisting four others to load and move trucks loaded with pipes for the temporary water supply works about 8 o'clock on Wednesday night. The night was very dark, and there were no lamps in use. A truck had become fast on the line, and deceased was assisting to push another against it with the object of starting it. By some means he got crushed between the buffers when the trucks collided, but no one witnessed the accident. He afterwards informed his companions that after the trucks met he endeavoured to get between them, and was caught by the buffers. He was seen soon afterwards by Dr. Curtayne, who directed that he be removed to the hospital, which was done. It was then found that several of his ribs were broken, and that they had penetrated the lungs. He remained in the institution until Saturday morning, when death took place. The jury found a verdict of accidental death, and added a rider censuring the company for not providing lamps for the man while working at night.

Mr. Bowden held a second inquest at the same place on Saturday afternoon, on the body of a man named William Sharman, who died a few hours previously. It was shown in evidence that the deceased was employed on the Grt. Western Railway line, near Seven Hills. Shortly before 1 o'clock on Saturday, while at work, deceased took ill, and fell down. Wet cloths were applied to his head, and he was placed in a train going to Parramatta, but died on the road. The post-mortem examination held by Dr. Phillips led to the impression that death was the result of sunstroke, and the jury found a verdict to that effect.

THE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT OF CHOLERA.

The Madrid correspondent of the St. James's Gazette writes under date August 15:—"A careful observation of what is going on in Madrid and the provinces has convinced me that cholera is not a very dangerous disease if only the following precautions be taken:—Live well; eat no fruit or vegetables of any kind except boiled or baked potatoes. Have no carpets, curtains, or waxed floors, and scrub the floors daily with hot—very hot—water, into which has been thrown carbolic acid or some other disinfectant. Throw carbolic acid daily into the drains and dust-bins. Have good disinfectants in every room, and renew them daily. Sprinkle the walls with carbolic acid, and if they can be washed with hot water and carbolic acid, all the better. When you go out, sprinkle your clothes with carbolic acid; avoid cabs, omnibuses, and tramways. Drink in moderation water that has been previously boiled, and put into it a teaspoonful of rum for every glass. When the baker brings the bread, put it into a hot oven for a few minutes. At the most insignificant indisposition go to bed, if possible, and take a cup of hot tea, or some other sudorific. If you have any nausea, vomiting, or diarrhœa, have an infusion made with a pound of tea, into which put 30 drops of laudanum, and take a cup every two hours. If these symptoms are accompanied with pains in different parts of the body, or any cramps, stop in bed, taking care not to stop perspiration and drinking a cup of tea every two hours; but send for the doctor without a moment's delay. If you perspire at this first stage of the disease (and if you act as above recommended you are pretty sure to do so) you are safe, but stop in bed a day or two. I feel quite convinced that there is not a particle of truth in the statement that cholera attacks suddenly and violently, and kills patients right off. I have found, by asking of persons who have had the cholera, that it invariably begins with an uneasy, insignificant feeling in the digestive organs, a feeling which most people take no notice of. Yet, it is at this moment that the disease should be attacked, with the simple remedy of going to bed and perspiring. If this were done, I firmly believe that 80 per cent. of the attacked would be cured. People neglect this insidious little uneasiness, thinking it is nothing, until they are alarmed by the more marked symptoms, and then it is perhaps too late to ward off the second stage of the disease, which is so frightful. I will now give some statistics. When the cholera broke out in the prison of Carthagena, 38 convicts were seized with it on the first day, and 21 died; 23 on the second day and 14 died; 31 on the third day and 26 died. On the fourth day the naval doctors took charge of the infirmary, with the result that on that day 23 convicts were attacked and 10 died; on the fifth day 14 took ill and one died; on the sixth day 18 took ill and three died; on the seventh day 13 took ill and on the eight day seven were attacked, but none died on either of these days; and on the ninth day nine convicts were attacked and one died. These splendid results were obtained by the following method of treatment:—1. Premonitory symptoms. Infusion of manzanilla (common chamomile) with finely powdered subnitrate or subcarbonate of bismuth, and laudanum from 15 to 20 drops. Warm broth, with good port or some other generous wine, alternating every hour with the above albuminous water. Induce perspiration, and maintain it. 1. Graver symptoms. Hypodermic injections of 3 to 4 grammes (this is Spanish and French measure) of bromhydrate or any chemical salt at 25 per cent. The cramps disappear with hypodermic injections of morphia, 2 centigrammes, and the paste (masa). 3. Vomiting and intense thirst. Pieces of ice, and iced wine and iced broths, alternately. Induce by every possible means energetic reaction and abundant diaphoresis, repeating the injections if necessary. 4. Endeavour to keep up the patient's courage and hope. The above treatment is given in an official report signed by four well-known naval doctors, and is thoroughly trustworthy."

NEW COURTHOUSE, PARRAMATTA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—I could not help feeling amused when I read the letter on the above subject signed "W. T. Airey," which appeared in your issue of to-day. Mr. Airey commences by asserting that you have evidently been misinformed with reference to the amendment, and then goes on to show that your report was correct, but that the chairman made a mistake in counting the votes. Mr. Airey's meaning may be clear to himself, but it is very unintelligible to me. With one breath he accuses you of publishing misleading information, and with his next says that the fact that the chairman had to declare the original resolution lost was proof that the amendment was carried, and, therefore, he concludes that you were misinformed. Perhaps Mr. Airey will explain himself.

With reference to Mr. Airey's other remarks, I can only say that the Mayor, as chairman, declared both resolution and amendment negatived, and as no appeal was made against his decisions at the meeting, they must be accepted as final. I will go further, and say that when the resolution was first put, the show of hands was decidedly in favour of it. Some confusion arose, and the question was again put, and the Mayor then declared the resolution lost. The amendment was then put, and, notwithstanding that there was some "double voting," i.e., holding up both hands in favour of it, it was also declared lost. If Mr. Airey and his supporters had considered that the Mayor was in error, they should, like men, have there and then protested against his decision, and I feel sure that his Worship would have extended to them that courtesy and fair play which are so characteristic of him.

With reference to Mr. Airey's last assertion I can only say that the site selected for a new Courthouse is most unhesitatingly condemned by the public of Parramatta, with the exception of a small section who desire the building placed "agin their own doors."

October 10. I am, &c., F. LOVELL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—In this day's issue of the Herald I notice a letter signed "W. T. Airey," endeavouring to show the report, which appeared in your paper on the 6th instant, of the proceedings of the public meeting held at the Town Hall on the 5th instant, was incorrect. Permit me to say your report was a most faithful and true one, and my assertion can be endorsed by a large number of our principal townspeople.

It is quite understood in Parramatta why Mr. Airey feels aggrieved, for it is beyond doubt the new Courthouse will not be near his public-house as he desired.

October 10. I am, &c., JOHN TAYLOR.

INTERCOLONIAL TRADE UNION CONGRESS.

The final sitting of the Intercolonial Trade Union Congress was held at the Protestant Hall on Saturday morning. Mr. Thomas Caddy (president) occupied the chair during a portion of the morning, but, having to retire for a brief period to transact some business of an urgent character, he committed the presidency during his absence to Mr. S. Wells (South Australia), the vice-president.

RECORDING A REMARK.

On the motion of Mr. WALKER (Sydney Boilermakers), seconded by Mr. F. E. FEWSTER (Victoria), it was resolved that a remark made by Mrs. Creswell (the delegate of the Victorian Tailoresses' Union), relative to a member of the Congress being engaged in the pernicious system of sweating, be recorded on the minutes of the Congress.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEES.

Mr. W. E. MURPHY (Victoria) moved,—"That it is desirable that the constitution of future Parliamentary committees be left to the principal Trades and Labour Councils of the metropolis of each colony; and the number of representatives to each be equal, and such number to be named by this and each preceding Congress to future appointments. And, further, that a central council be formed of one from each Parliamentary Committee, to deal with all questions of intercolonial interest to trades organisations in Australia, the necessary expenses to be defrayed in equal proportion to each colony."

Mr. D. BENNETT (Victoria) seconded the motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE (Sydney) moved as an amendment,—"That the Parliamentary Committees of Victoria and New South Wales should be elected at this Congress."

Mr. TRENWITH seconded the amendment.

After considerable discussion the amendment was submitted and was negatived.

Mr. W. G. SPENCE (Victoria) moved as an amendment, "That the words 'the principal Trades and Labour Councils of the metropolis of,' in Mr. Murphy's motion, be struck out." He explained that the omission of these words would have the effect of making the motion in its operation thoroughly representative and democratic. They should give the resolution such a wide scope as to render it as representative as possible.

The amendment was seconded by Mr. GRAY (of Victoria), and having been adopted, the motion as amended was then submitted and carried.

Mr. G. WILLIAMS (Victoria), moved,—"That the present Parliamentary committees of New South Wales and Victoria make arrangements for the election of their successors if possible within one month."

This motion was agreed to.

It was resolved that the representatives of colonies other than New South Wales and Victoria, be requested to take the necessary steps for the appointment of Parliamentary Committees in their respective colonies.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER (Victoria), it was resolved that the next Congress be held in Adelaide about 12 months hence, with the understanding that it be held as nearly as possible to the celebration of the eight-hour anniversary in that colony.

Mr. W. E. MURPHY submitted, on behalf of the Victorian Parliamentary Committee, a progress financial report, showing expenditure amounting to £56 12s.

VOTES OF THANKS.

Votes of thanks having been accorded to the chairman, vice-chairman, and the intercolonial press, the proceedings terminated shortly before noon.

At midday the delegates, accompanied by representatives of Sydney and Melbourne newspapers, started in the Government steamer Thetis for an excursion on the harbour. The steamer first proceeded a short distance up the Parramatta River, and on nearing the training ship Vernon boats came off to take the visitors aboard that vessel. The boys went through the programme customary on such occasions—which include the firing of the guns and the "manning" of yards, and the alacrity they displayed, together with the other evidences of discipline and cheerfulness they gave, called forth many expressions of admiration upon the part of the visitors. The delegates were afforded an opportunity of inspecting the vessel, and were supplied with information as to the system pursued. Before the visitors returned to the Thetis, Mr. Jacob Garrard, M.L.A., on behalf of the delegates, expressed the pleasure which the visit had afforded, and thanked Captain Neitenstein for his courtesy. Mr. Bromley (Victoria) then handed to the superintendent a sum of money which it was desired Captain Neitenstein should distribute amongst the boys in any form which he thought most desirable. The company having returned to the Thetis, that steamer resumed her trip, which embraced a visit to Middle Harbour, and allowed the visitors to get a close view of Manly, Clontarf, Watson's Bay, Double Bay, and other of the principal features of the harbour.

To-day the delegates to the Congress are to be taken over the Blue Mountains, the Government having granted a special train for the purpose. The delegates will rendezvous at Mr. Abraham White's Working Men's Club, Pitt-street, and after breakfast will proceed to Redfern, whence they will leave for the Zig-Zag by special train, starting a 7 o'clock.

THE PUBLICANS' SIDE OF LOCAL OPTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Permit me to reply to some of the mis-statements made at the enthusiastic meeting of licensed victuallers held in the Town Hall last Friday.

Mr. C. H. Reid, in speaking of full local option, said,—"This form of it could be easily described in a few words: it meant that it was to be within the power of a certain majority in a municipal ward, or town, or district, to decide whether all the hotels, including family hotels and houses for the accommodation of travellers throughout the length and breadth of the land, should be shut up."

Our memorial to be presented to the House reads thus:—"The petition of the undersigned members of the New South Wales Local Option League and others humbly prayeth for such a measure of local self-government that will extend Local Option so as to enable the residents to decide whether they will have any public houses or not. And your petitioners therefore humbly pray that your honourable House will take the premises into favourable consideration, and grant such relief as may seem best to your Honourable House."

I presume Mr. Reid's subtle mind can grasp the difference between the above! Since we started in 1883 this has been in our constitution, which is founded on Sir Wilfrid Lawson's resolution. It reads thus:—"The object shall be to secure the adoption of Local Option in accordance with the following basis: 'That inasmuch as the ancient and avowed object of licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors is to supply a supposed public want without detriment to the public welfare, a legal power of restraining the issue or renewal of licenses should be placed in the hands of the persons most deeply interested and affected, namely, the inhabitants themselves, who are entitled to protection from the injurious consequences of the present system by some efficient measure of Local Option.'" For this resolution, which was passed in the House of Commons 27th April, 1883, by a majority (with which Mr. Gladstone voted) of 87, he said "he was entitled to speak as to the position of the Government with respect to the motion, because he had never yet voted for it as he should to-night. (Cheers.) He voted on former occasions for the order of going into committee of supply, not on the ground that he was opposed to the substance of the motion. He had always claimed to be an advocate of the principle of local option. It was an essential part of local Government." Did Mr. Reid conveniently omit to inform his hearers that Dr. Barry is a pronounced believer in local option? On this point he is as thorough-going as I am, differing only on the side issue of compensation, for the Primate said, subsequent to our correspondence, at the annual meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society, "local option is founded on right principles, and is the winning cause."

In England we have such men as the Archbishop of York, Cardinal Manning, Sir W. Harcourt, Sir Wilfred Lawson, Professor Hayley, Archdeacon Farrar, and others, in full accord with the principle of local option; and the Times tells us it is "fast becoming the leading political question of the day." How can the bashful orator dovetail these with his resolution, "That the principle of local option is unsound and unconstitutional," &c.?

Mr. Reid boasted that he was the only successful candidate who seemed to do without the help of the temperance people—so successfully that, in his last contest, he was left outside the arena of M.P.-dom.

Without claiming the gift of prophecy, I feel convinced that the people will settle the people's question, and decide, as Bishop Barry so appropriately summarised it, that "Local Option is founded on right principles, and is the winning cause."

I am, &c.,
EDWARD J. H. KNAPP, Hon. Sec.

AN AWKWARD PATIENT.—Zoologists will be interested in a recent surgical operation which took place at Cincinnati. The unwilling subject was a tiger, which was suffering agonies from a malformation of one of its claws. The claw was clipped most successfully, though not without much trouble and no little danger. This is how it was done: In one of the small compartments of the inner cage a low, strong, temporary ceiling had been built. Several pieces of timber, nailed together firmly, were placed at one end of the compartment, and to these were attached four ropes reaching outside of the cage. The tiger was driven into the compartment, the sliding door closed, and six strong men began to pull at the ropes. This drew the frame close to the iron bars of the cage, with the tiger, now howling with rage, wedged between. He fought terribly, and with an enormous effort once broke the timbers. One of the operators, at the risk of losing an arm, reached into the cage over the writhing beast, and fastened the ropes. Finally the tiger's right leg was caught in a noose and pulled straight out, while she was held in position by iron bars above, braced in the timbers at the back of her. All this time one of the men held a board in her jaws, which was crushed as if it were a biscuit. For a time it looked as if she would overpower the men, and the operation would prove a failure; but the keen-eyed surgeon watched his chance, and finally succeeded in extracting, with a knife and heavy pair of pincers, the offending claw, and the beast was released. The claw was carried away as a relic.

THE GENERAL ELECTION.

On Saturday Sir Patrick Jennings was sworn in as Colonial Secretary, and the Premier was re-sworn as Colonial Treasurer. On the same day Sir Patrick was requested to allow himself to be nominated for East Sydney. He, however, declined the request, giving as his reason for so doing that he had resolved to offer his services again to the electors of the Bogan. Sir Patrick's address will be published in to-morrow's issue.

At his meeting on Saturday evening, Sir Henry Parkes announced that he was a candidate for St. Leonards, and that, if elected, he would sit for that constituency. What will his supporters in Argyle think of this? According to a statement made by Mr. William Davies, of Goulburn, on Monday last, Sir Henry Parkes gave an emphatic promise to the electors of Argyle, that in the event of his being returned to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Gannon, he would not desert them at the general election. In the face of what Sir Henry Parkes said at St. Leonards, will his central committee in Argyle now nominate him for that constituency?

Sir Henry Parkes says he does not aspire to fill the position of leader of any Government; but if it comes to him in the natural course of events well and good. He states that he is ambitious of one thing, and that is to be the leader of the country in this general election. He prophesied at St. Leonards that not a man who stood up and declared his support for the Ministry would be elected for Sydney.

Sir Henry Parkes opposes the Government on the ground that they are improperly in office. Mr. Dibbs, he said, stood before them and before the country as a traitor to the Constitution. Referring to local matters, he assured the electors that if he were returned to Parliament, and his life spared, he would have St. Leonards connected with the metropolis by means of a bridge within five years.

Sir Henry Parkes' wit is almost as offensive as his abuse. The question was asked him on Saturday night, "What do you think about Mr. Abbott, the Minister for Mines?" Sir Henry replied, "I have nothing to say about Mr. Rabbit: I have no time to speak of Mr. Rabbit."

An illustration of the kind of work that has to be done by members of Parliament was given by Mr. S. A. Stephen, who in reviewing his labours before the electors of Canterbury, said that he had been present with one deputation a week every week since he had been elected, and had been about 1000 times at various offices on matters connected with the electorate, having to call 200 times about one matter before he got satisfaction. And yet, Mr. Stephen is seeking re-election! Evidently, there are adequate compensations for all this worry, or Mr. Stephen must be one of the most unselfish of men.

Most of the candidates for the city and suburban electorates have declared against full local option. Even Sir Henry Parkes, who has the support of the Local Option League, does not pledge himself to advocate it in Parliament. The majority of the candidates, too, speak approvingly of the expedition to the Soudan. Perhaps one-half are in favour of the payment of members; and three or four are enamoured of protection. With very few exceptions, the new candidates are declaring themselves to be independent; they will, they affirm, support measures rather than men.

Messrs. Fletcher and Ellis have received a good reception in Newcastle. They addressed two meetings on Saturday, and were accorded votes of confidence. A telegram from that city states that there is a strong feeling there in favour of Mr. G. A. Lloyd.

Mr. Vivian arrived at Wollombi yesterday for the purpose of contesting the election. He will deliver his first speech this evening. It is said he has a good chance of being elected.

Mr. S. W. Gray, the late member for the Richmond, has advertised that he does not intend seeking re-election. The electorate has now the privilege of sending two representatives into the Legislature. The candidates at present in the field are Mr. T. Ewing, surveyor; Mr. Crouch, Mayor of Casino; and Mr. Patrick Hogan, of Sydney.

At his meeting on Saturday evening Mr. M. Chapman said that when he was elected, 20 months ago, he went into Parliament with a determination to get for the Glebe a fair share of the money which he knew would be expended throughout the colony. He was willing to admit that it was not perhaps the duty of a member of Parliament to go in for the special purpose of getting roads and bridges; but when he saw the great scramble which was going on around him, he made an attempt to obtain some of the money, and threw aside his policy for the time being.

Mr. Hawken addressed a large meeting at the railway bridge, Newtown, on Saturday evening. He declared himself to be an opponent of the Government, and was in favour of the payment of members. On the same evening Mr. J. C. Neild delivered a speech at Randwick, in which he discussed the several questions now before the country.

On Saturday evening a meeting of representatives from Sydney and suburban lodges, I. O. G. T., was held in the Temperance Hall, to define a course of action for the forthcoming elections. About 30 lodges were represented. A resolution was carried to adopt the vote for vote principle only. The following candidates were then selected to receive the support of the temperance party:—East Sydney, Mr. S. E. Lees; South Sydney, Messrs. Forsyth, Davies, and Richardson; West Sydney, Mr. Abigail; Balmain, Messrs. Garrard, Buchanan, and Hawthorne; Paddington, Messrs. Neild and Allen; Redfern, Messrs. Sutherland, Kenwick, and Stephen; Glebe, Messrs. Chapman and Meeks; Canterbury, Messrs. Hutchison, Henson, and M'Coy.

Mr. A. J. Riley, one of the candidates for Canterbury, addressed two large meetings on Saturday evening—one at Burwood, and the other at Enfield. At each meeting Mr. Riley gave a clear exposition of his political opinions, and received a unanimous vote of confidence.

Mr. E. W. O'Sullivan is a candidate for South Sydney. He is opposed to the Government. He advocates "a judicious and discriminating protective tariff, to run for 20 years, commencing at 20 per cent., and decreasing 1 per cent. per annum until expiration." He is in favour of the passing of a Workshops and Factories Act; and regards payment of members as the keystone of the democratic arch.

Mr. Bellamey addressed a large meeting at Camperdown on Saturday evening. He spoke on many of the political topics of the day. He approved of the Land Act receiving a fair trial, but was strongly opposed to the Civil Service Act, which he contended ought to be repealed.

On the same evening Mr. Robert Butcher explained his opinions to a large number of the electors of Paddington. He condemned the factious conduct of the Opposition, which had necessitated the dissolution of the Assembly, and expressed himself as being in favour of amending the Licensing Act so that the public-houses might be opened for a short time on Sundays.

Mr John Davies delivered an electioneering speech on Saturday evening. He reviewed the work of the late Government, asserted that they had failed to furnish legislation of a beneficial character, shown incapacity in administration, and had not cleansed themselves from the charges of corruption made against them.

Mr. John Woods, of the firm of Woods and Co., Bridge-street, has been requested to stand for West Sydney, South Sydney, and Orange. He has, however, declined all the invitations, and has no intention of becoming a candidate for any constituency.

Mr. David Buchanan has written to the electors of Northumberland stating that if they will elect him he will represent the constituency in Parliament. In his letter Mr. Buchanan said that his professional duties would not allow him to visit the electorate before the polling day.

In one of Mr. Toohey's advertisements, published in Saturday's issue, he is represented as saying that he advocated protection and useful legislation. What he intended to say was that he advocates practical and useful legislation.

There are now eight candidates for the three seats in the Balmain electorate. The latest is Mr. J. S. Hawthorne. He is an opponent of the Government, and regards the appointment of Mr. Badgery to the Works Department as being as objectionable as was Mr. Wright's appointment thereto. He believes in free trade, but would advocate a system of bonuses for the development of colonial industries.

EAST SYDNEY.

MR. E. BARTON'S MEETING.

On Saturday evening Mr. Edmund Barton, one of the candidates for the representation of East Sydney in Parliament, addressed about 1000 of the electors from the balcony of Ryan's Hotel, Oxford-street, opposite the Darlinghurst Courthouse.

Mr. F. Bevill, M.A., who was chairman, made a brief speech, introducing the candidate. Mr. Barton's address was listened to with evident interest and attention, and was only now and again interrupted by a few persons evidently opposed to his candidature. They occasionally interrupted him with questions more or less irrelevant, to which he invariably retorted in a sledge-hammer style, which never failed to excite a roar of laughter at the expense of the questioners.

Mr. Barton commenced his address by referring to the position he had occupied in the late Parliament as Speaker, and said that he intended to invite from his constituents a direct answer to the questions whether Parliament did right in putting him where it did, following out the vote of the electors which placed him at the top of the poll for East Sydney, and whether, placed as he had been in the chair of the House, they were satisfied with his conduct? (Cheers, and cries of "Yes" with a few "Noes." He was proud the "Noes" were in a very small minority. In accepting that position he was actuated by motives which few of them would condemn. He had refused it on two or three occasions, and it was only when a vote was passed that he should be nominated that he consented to stand for it. Against his own interests he bowed to the decision of the House. He did not desire to be a member of the Stuart Administration or to be Speaker; but wished to unite to the practice of politics the actual practice of his own profession. (Applause.) It seemed to the majority of Parliament that events should be otherwise, and he considered it a point of loyalty that he should obey them. Therefore he accepted the position he had occupied in the late Parliament, and he thought they would say he had done rightly and honorably. (Applause.) Three years had elapsed since that time, and he thought everyone would admit it was quite possible he had made mistakes. (No! no!) He did not say that his conduct had been free from error or misapprehension; but everything he had done had been done with a pure motive and in accordance with a desire to promote the best interests of Parliamentary government. (Applause.) No one could exaggerate the responsibilities laid upon a Speaker, for whichever way he decided he was bound to give some temporary irritation to one party, while the other would be pleased and satisfied. He never knew a decent man who did not make enemies; but, as regarded his own rulings, of all those gentlemen who had been offended or irritated at them, nearly all had afterwards come round to his side and said that he was right. (Applause.) He did not say this as his own opinion, but because he had received from the leaders of all parties in the House reiterated assurances that they were perfectly satisfied, not only with the impartiality, but with the ability with which he had discharged his duties—(applause)—and so he did not care for the one or two men who stood there and called out "No." (A voice: What have you done with young Taylor?) As Speaker of the House he had done Mr. Taylor justice, and, finding that he had infringed the laws of the House, he had put those laws into operation against him. (Applause.) It was possible that although they would elect him for the constituency of East Sydney—(applause)—he might have to occupy a position on the floor of the House, and in view of that contingency he could not expect them to take him entirely upon trust, and so he thought it his duty to express to them his views upon the politics of the day as an independent member. The first topic he would touch upon was the important one of local government. Few people realised how important a question it had become, for up to the present public works had been carried out by central authority, which had been besieged and pestered by country deputations, Sydney deputations, and members of Parliament to carry out local works; and pressure had been brought to bear upon members of Parliament by country constituencies to make them advocate local works. This roads and bridges system was not a desirable one—(applause)—and a local Government Act would remove pressure from members of Parliament, and leave them free to support a pure and progressive system of government. Sir Henry Parkes and Sir Alexander Stuart had both taken this matter in hand. He would not attempt to decide between the two bills, but the latter one made it imperative instead of optional with country localities to come in under it. He was thoroughly in favor of an honest system of local government, and he was also in favor of a Public Health Bill. (Applause.) He did not believe that a man should have the liberty of keeping his premises in such a state as to poison his neighbours, and he should support any legislation which would attack this. He did not say that the ideal bill was the one brought forward by the present Government: but there was a great deal of good in it, and with proper amendments it might become an inestimable boon to the community. With regard to Civil Service reform, he told them three years ago that a proper measure for the purpose should include provision for the superannuation of old and worn-out public servants. There was a tendency to keep them in the service, pay them their salaries, and pay other men for doing their work. The present bill needed some amendment, and it was essential that the provision for the increase of salaries should be revised. A man who did his work well should have his increase of salary granted by the recommendation of the permanent head of his department, and Civil servants should have the right of appeal from the Board to the Minister as to the value put upon their services. (Applause.) In his opinion the bill was not sufficiently comprehensive, and there were many people who were not classified as permanent officers who should have been treated with more justice and generosity. (Applause.) The difficulty of the land question was enormously enhanced by our changeable climate and the want of water conservation. This was the most important question they could consider, because on the proper cultivation of our lands depended our success as a nation; and, to make our lands productive, water conservation was the thing most to be desired. If he were called upon to take a more active part in the legislation of the country he would support such a system, because by its means a far greater amount of wealth than at present would be circulated amongst us. As to the Land Act, there was much difference of opinion, but he would say this in its favour, that it contained a large number of principles which were asserted by them at the last general election, and which were accordingly carried into law. So long as it did that he was in favour of the bill, but if in any degree it went beyond that he was against it. However, it had been in force so short a time that we could not decide upon it yet. We should withhold our judgment until it had been in operation for a year or two. As regarded intercolonial federation, he was an uncompromising opponent of the Federal Bill passed by the Parliament of England and by the other colonies, for he did not believe in a federation that was promoted by designing people for their own ends and to consult the protective policy of Victoria. The design of the bill seemed to be to enable Victoria to have free trade with the other colonies, and yet to place a barrier around Australia, and prohibit our having fair and proper dealings with our mother-country. The federation of which he would approve would include these great colonies in a great league, offensive and defensive, military and political, and he believed it would come about. As far as he was permitted, he would work steadily for the accomplishment of it. (Applause.) The fiscal policy of Victoria had been protective, and for a little time it paid well, for the prices of articles produced and the wages of labourers were improved, and for a little time they lived in a fools' paradise. But they over-produced, the prices of goods and the rates of wages dropped, and now they proposed a system of intercolonial free trade, by which they could pour their stuff into New South Wales, which he objected to. More than that, if he found that this great constituency was in favour of this wretched abortion of federation as proposed, he would rather resign his seat than consent to it. (Cheers.) (A voice: How about education?) He was in favour of the present system. As regarded the great question of free trade and protection, he could conceive of nothing more calculated to bring about the ruin of this colony than a Chinese system of protection. Our trade should be as free as air, and if we must have taxation he should support the taxation of property. As our Customs duties were at present adjusted, the poorest man had as much to pay as the richest, and much more in proportion to his means. The system pressed most severely upon the poor man, while the rich got off comparatively free. (Applause.) What were our courts and our police force kept up for? For the protection of property, and it was manifestly fair that property should pay its fair share of their cost. (Cheers.) no rigid, wretched Chinese system of ad valorem duties should be imposed here; and when he said that taxation should fall upon property, he meant that it might be in the shape of an income tax, but that it should fall upon those that could afford to pay it. As regarded immigration, he would say that if anybody would consider the way in which this country had grown up he would speedily come to a decision in its favour. When our fathers came here the country was occupied by blackfellows, and had not the gradual increase of our race been assisted by immigration Sydney would not have had one-tenth of the population it had now. He was quite sure of this, that every decent working man who came into this country was a contributor to the wealth of it. (Applause, and "No! no!") He brought a body to be fed and clothed, and supplied with the natural wants of man, and to help in subduing the country to supply those wants. If he did that he was helping us in a noble work, and it was only men of paltry spirit who would oppose his coming. The operation of immigration was clearly beneficial to the country. The vast immigration to Canada and America was not assisted, but why was it not? (A voice: Protection.) It was not in consequence of protection, but because it took only six days to get from England to America, and six weeks to get to Australia. Some inducement must be given people to come here, and those who objected to our system of immigration were brazen, leather-lunged men, who had benefited by immigration themselves, and wanted to keep its benefits to themselves. (A voice: "How about the Soudan?") He thought the Soudan expedition was a noble, magnificent, and patriotic idea—(applause)—and if it were to come over again he should agree with it. He thought it right to recognise our obligation to the mother that gave us birth, and that the Soudan expedition was the grandest action ever taken on behalf of the consolidation of the British Empire. (Applause.) It was an action in which we recognised our national relations and threw filial arms around our mother, and recognised that blood was thicker than water. (Applause.) In conclusion, he would say that during the time he sat in the Chair of the House every man had fair play, and debate was carried on with order and decorum; and he thought he had come back to them a much better man than he was three years ago. If again returned as one of their representatives he should do his best for those who opposed him, as well as for those who supported him. (Cheers.)

In reply to questions, Mr. Barton said that he could not tell whether the present Ministry should retain office until he saw how they acted. Local option was an experiment which had not succeeded. As regarded protection, it meant benefiting the capitalist at the expense of the small manufacturer, and he would not consent to that. He believed in freedom of trade, in the eight-hour system of labour, and in restricting the importation of Chinese. He was not in favour of payment of members. (A voice: "You are paid.") What was he paid for? The duties of a Speaker were not the ordinary duties of a member. He had to perform duties outside the House as arduous as those in it, and if it were necessary that the services of her Majesty's Ministers should be recognised, it was equally necessary that those of the Speaker should be. He had never considered the question of a wheel tax. He considered that the right to vote at municipal elections should be extended to householders. (A voice: "How about Sunday closing?") He believed it was a restriction upon public liberty—(applause)—and should never have been introduced. It operated in favour of men of means, and against the man who depended for refreshment upon the coin he earned from day to day. What was needed was to take care that the man who sold liquor was of good character, and that the liquor he sold was of good quality, and then he thought it would not hurt anybody much. He did not know anything about the Standard Paint Company, or whether any Ministers were shareholders in it. No member of an incorporated company should be a member of Parliament unless that company included 30 members. He would give the industries of this country fair play under a proper system of free trade, and he would never consent to the crushing out of our manufactures, but he would not consent to any improper coddling of them, for if, with our coal and iron and minerals, we could not develop our industries without coddling, he did not think we needed them. (Applause.)

Mr. M'Elhone then came forward and said he had to ask Mr. Barton a question. Mr. Garvan had lately moved a resolution in reference to members of Parliament and Ministers of the Crown being public contractors with the Government. Wright, Heaton, and Co. were living on the public as large railway contractors, and certain members of the Government were also shareholders in a company and contractors forcing their wares on the country. Was Mr. Barton opposed to this?

Mr. Barton replied that he had always been of the opinion that Mr. Wright should never have accepted the office of Minister for Works. It was for him an anomalous position, and he was glad this had been recognised. The Constitution Act allowed a member of Parliament to be a contractor with the Government if he were a member of an incorporated company numbering seven members. He, himself, thought the Act should be amended so as to increase the requisite number of members in the company to 30, and he said that the shareholders should be bona-fide ones. (Applause.)

Mr. M'Elhone said that he was so satisfied with the reply that he should support Mr. Barton.

Mr. R. Teece moved that Mr. Edmund Barton was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate of East Sydney in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. R. T. Kirby seconded the motion, Mr. W. P. Manning supported it, and it was carried with only about half a dozen dissentients.

Mr. Barton briefly returned thanks, and the proceedings terminated.

MR. GRIFFITHS' MEETING.

Mr. G. N. Griffiths, one of the candidates for the representation of East Sydney, addressed about 150 persons on Saturday evening, from a balcony at Mr. Thomas Keary's hotel, William-street. Dr. J. C. Cox was voted to the chair, on the motion of Mr. John M'Elhone.

Mr. Griffiths, who was received with applause, began his remarks by a reference to his election to the last Parliament, and attributed his victory as an unknown man, brought forward by unknown men, over a well-known and respected politician, like Sir Henry Parkes, to the feeling of the people that they wanted business-like legislation, and not mere talk and party strife. The Government, finding it impossible to do business, had appealed to the country to send members into Parliament who would devote themselves to practical legislation, and he emphatically asserted that the question at this election was whether the business of the country was to go forward, or party strife continue, to the stoppage of business. He had worked quietly and steadily, not only for East Sydney, but for the colony in general, and now came before them for them to say whether he had done them justice, and should be returned. If defeated, he would still have done what he felt to be his duty. Though he had not spoken very much in the House, he had attended to the interests of the electors, and had studied to give a right and conscientious vote, for it was the place of junior members to vote conscientiously and intelligently, without taking up the time of the House, and forestalling older and abler members on both sides. He regretted the circumstances which had brought about the dissolution, and referred to the proper consideration felt by the people of the colony for the late Premier in his serious illness as the cause of the delay in convoking Parliament. As to the land question, he reminded his hearers that he had advocated a revision of the land law of the country to make it thoroughly applicable to the circumstances of the colony. The bill passed last session did not include many provisions which he thought essential to the well-being of the country. It made no provision for classifying the different qualities of the soil; but made one unalterable standard of value of £1 per acre for all land thrown open to free selection. This was the fundamental error of all the Land Bills of 1861, 1875, 1881, the proposed bill of 1882, and the enacted bill of 1884, and, if not rectified, would cause great confusion. He found fault with the haphazard mode of settlement that would be followed under this bill. They might give away the land for nothing, if they chose; but for the benefit of the settlers themselves, and the country at large, the people must be settled in communities. A scattered population led to many abuses, and great expenditure for means of communication and for surveys, which, with the cost of the land boards, meant an expense of £500,000, a direct impost on the earnings of the country. The reversion of improvements to the Crown on the termination of the lease was opposed to all principles of ethics, and to tenant rights throughout civilised Europe. This called for immediate rectification, because towards the end of the lease the improvements would be allowed to go into disrepair, and would be valueless when they passed over to the Crown; and, further, they should endeavour to promote the employment of labour in the country, where it was most desirable it should be employed, or it would be necessary to stop immigration, and an emigration would have to be commenced to prevent the people from starving. Without these alterations the Land Bill would break down of its own weight, and on these grounds he had opposed the third reading. He upheld the noble action of Mr. Dalley in sending a contingent of troops to the Soudan, and referred to the effect of that action on the national development of the colony and on Australian defences. The Civil Service Bill recently passed had been rushed through without due deliberation. The claims of the old Civil servants were not properly considered, and there was one fatal error requiring rectification—that all the Civil servants had been classified according to the salaries they happened to be receiving when the bill was passed. The Victorian Civil Service Act provided for a classification on the recommendation of commissioners who inquired as to who were the most worthy, so as to place them in the various classes, and the Act was working fairly well in that colony. The Act adopted here was intended to abolish political influence in appointments and promotions, which might have been prevented by investigation by commissioners. The classification of the temporary staff had also been overlooked, and this should be put right. The Health Bill was, perhaps, the most important of all the bills proposed by the late Ministry, for it could be applied to all parts of the country where there was no provision for drainage or sewerage. The Local Government Bill would have the effect of enabling members to be sent into Parliament for the good of the country generally, and not merely to advocate the construction of roads and bridges in their own districts. Members would be independent, inasmuch as the constituencies would be able to get as a right what they now received as a favour, and the country would perhaps have better legislation in future, and more of it. He congratulated the late Government on having brought forward their city railway extension proposal, of which he thoroughly approved, as one which would be of the greatest possible convenience, at a cost of not much more than £500,000, and which, beyond being a means of bringing traffic to the harbour, would before very long be extended to the eastern suburbs. With regard to the country railway loans, he was opposed to the Mudgee and Walgett, Grafton and Glen Innes, and Forbes and Wilcannia lines. In connection with the local option question he considered that the people should not be debarred from obtaining necessary refreshment on Sundays. He wished to see people in the museum, the gardens, picture galleries, and free public libraries on Sundays, having free access to their own places of amusement at all times and seasons consistent with propriety, and able to make full use of the means of recreation around the city. He had voted against Sunday closing in the interest of the people, and advocated the opening of the public-houses for an hour or two in the middle of the day. He was opposed to local option in the form it took under the present Licensing Act. It meant that eleven-twentieths of the ratepayers could decide against new licenses or renewals, and the full local option platform included, in addition to this, that there should be a local option vote as to renewals. In such a constituency as East Sydney, with 10,240 ratepayers, 11-20ths would be 5600, and if those 5600 ratepayers so decided, all renewals of licenses to houses of public accommodation would be refused, and this would be a grievous shame. Still, it would be the will of the people, and there was an end of it. But if these 5600 people were to decide to close up all the publichouses in East Sydney without giving the publicans compensation, he would at once retire from the representation of such a maniacal community. All proper facilities should be given to the people for necessary refreshments consistent with sobriety, and this applied both to the residents and to visitors. The trade should be under the strictest possible supervision, properly, and not harshly, exercised for the benefit and convenience of the people. He could not at present agree to the lines on which federation with Victoria and Queensland, as Protectionist colonies, had been proposed. Federation must be on the lines of the free-trade policy of New South Wales, and if Victoria would meet them on that point, they should meet Victoria on nearly every other. The positions and circumstances of the various colonies were so different that the proposed representation by two delegates from each was most inequitable. New South Wales was entitled to a stronger vote than Victoria, while the small colonies of Tasmania and Western Australia would be able to silence the voice of both Victoria and New South Wales together. In the matter of finance, he considered that the floating of the new loan was a great feather in the cap of the late Treasurer, Mr. Dibbs, who had done what no other Treasurer in the colonies had ever done, obtained 11 millions of money from the money market of Europe in 12 months, at a very good rate of interest. If the colony could borrow 50 millions on similar terms, and spend it on reproductive works, with a continuance of the same results, they would be gainers. As long as they could see their way to make valuable improvements with the money they borrowed, they were right in borrowing money. As to the Pacific mail service, he hoped that some reasonable compromise would be effected between New South Wales and New Zealand, so that direct communication should be obtained with California, which meant America, and that Sydney might secure the advantage—even by paying a small subsidy—of being the terminal port. Among those things which the constituency should not lose sight of, no matter who were their representatives, there was the erection of a proper hospital for the sick poor of Sydney. It was a burning shame and scandal that the City Infirmary should be allowed to remain in its present condition, and they must insist on having some definite settlement of the question. He gave credit to the people of Balmain for having instituted the cottage system, and suggested that their example should be followed in East Sydney. He held that the existence of abattoirs within easy reach of the city was absolutely necessary, and condemned the proposal to close the Glebe Island establishment before proper provision was made elsewhere for carrying on the work. The parks and gardens should be properly lit up at night. As to his future action in regard to the new Ministry, he reminded them that he had not sat behind the last Ministry, but on the cross-benches, and had voted for measures, not men. He spoke in approval of Mr. Dibbs, Mr. Abbott, and Mr. Badgery as members of the new Ministry, and concluded by referring to irrigation and water-conservation as being as essential to the interests of the colony as the Land Act itself.

The candidate's views were received with marks of approval, with occasional interruptions and dissent.

Alderman Beare proposed that Mr. Griffiths was a fit and proper person to represent the constituency, and referred to the prominent part Mr. Griffiths had taken in obtaining the establishment of a post-office in William-street, a water reserve at Elizabeth Bay, and a recreation ground for East Sydney.

Mr. Furniss seconded the motion, which was carried, and the candidate having acknowledged the vote, the proceedings terminated.

ALDERMAN S. E. LEES AT SMART'S HOTEL.

A meeting of the electors of East Sydney was held opposite Smart's Hotel, Pitt-street, on Saturday evening, for the purpose of hearing Mr. Alderman Lees express his views from the balcony. There was a large attendance. Mr. John West occupied the chair, and in introducing the candidate said Mr. Lees had served the district faithfully in the Municipal Council, and they would do well to elect such a tried servant to represent them in Parliament.

Mr. Lees, who was received with applause, said he had stood before them in a similar capacity five years ago, when he polled nearly 1400 votes. He was then comparatively unknown, but he had served them to the best of his ability since that time in the council. He had been asked to contest the seat at the last election, but he had preferred to wait for a more fitting opportunity. That opportunity had now come. They were engaged in a general election, the issues of which were of the utmost importance. He thought it was high time that the Parliament was dissolved, and it was their duty to return good men to represent them in the new House. (Hear, hear.) He felt proud at the cordial manner in which he had been returned by the ratepayers to represent them in the council. For six years he had done his best to secure for them all the benefits he could. He had helped to widen the streets, to beautify the district by a terrace. The water fountains in Hyde Park and the Domain had been placed there owing to him. He had also been the means of reducing the water-rate and had assisted in the reduction of the sewer-rate. If returned to Parliament he would endeavour to do his duty fearlessly and conscientiously in future as he had endeavoured to do in the past. He could honestly say that he had never shirked a vote because it was unpleasant, and he was not going to begin now. Referring to the political questions of the day, he observed that while there was no great measure before them, such as the Land Act, the Public Schools Bill, or an Electoral Franchise Bill, there were many questions of importance arising out of previous measures. The late Parliament had been elected to pass a Land Bill. That Act had now been passed; it was before the public for a trial, and he thought it should have a fair trial. He believed the framers of the Act were of the opinion that certain clauses required amendment, and he proposed, if returned, to vote for the amendments which appeared to him to be beneficial to the country. The Civil Service Bill would also, he thought, require considerable amendment; one of its clauses provided for the retention of a portion of the school teachers' salary for superannuation. This was all very well in the case of teachers who were to remain in the service, but it was, he contended, a hardship that the salaries of the pupil teachers, especially of the young women, should be reduced, because they would leave the service before they would be able to benefit by it. There were other clauses which would likewise require amendment. Referring to financial questions, the speaker expressed his belief in free trade, but at the same time he pointed out that there were so many anomalies in our tariff that we could not be said to be free trade. After quoting an instance of the anomalous state of the tariff, the speaker pointed out that, as a result of this state of things, the port from which the goods came was protected, to the disadvantage of the colony, goods being generally admitted free if manufactured at home, while a duty was placed on them if imported in an incomplete state. He contended, too, that while articles used by the poor were more or less heavily taxed, luxuries were admitted comparatively free. He believed in taxing goods which could be manufactured in the colony, and admitting duty free those which could not be manufactured here. (A Voice: "Why, that is protection.") He held that it was the very reverse. They might call him a fair trader if they liked, but he denied being a protectionist. If returned to Parliament, he should do his utmost to see the anomalies in the tariff removed. Referring to the city railway, the speaker expressed himself in favour of taking the railway right down to the water's edge. If returned, he should vote for the extension of the city railway. The Public Schools Act was one which had been found to work very well, and he should oppose any alteration being made. The question of payment of members was rising in importance every day. He had looked at this question from every side. He knew that many a poor man, able and energetic, had been debarred from representing his fellows in Parliament, because he could not afford it, while, on the other hand, some poor men had forced themselves up by energy and perseverance to a position which enabled them to occupy seats in the House without emolument. They must remember that payment of members might tend to increase the number of professional politicians, of men who entered Parliament, not because they wished to serve their country, but because they wished to improve their financial position; temptation would be rendered easier, and he was inclined to think that it would be better to remain as they were, and not introduce into this colony a principle which he did not think had proved so very wonderful a success in Victoria. In referring to the motion censuring Mr. Wright, the speaker said he had nothing whatever to say against the personal character of the Minister for Works, but he considered it very suspicious for a Minister at the head of the Works Department to be head of the largest carrying firm in the colony, and had he been in the House he would have voted in favour of the motion against such an anomalous position being retained. Touching immigration, he said he was opposed to any system of assisting people to come here from other countries. If they wanted to come, by all means let them come; but he did not think we ought to spend money in bringing them over. Referring to the Upper House, the speaker said he did not believe in a nominee House. The whole system of democracy pointed to election by the people, and he contended that the Upper House should be elected just the same as the Lower one. This brought him to local option, which gave the people the opportunity of deciding whether they would have public-houses in their midst. While in favour of local option, at the same time he could not support any measure which would enable the people to vote away a man's license without affording the publican some compensation for the loss which he had sustained. Questioned as to his views of the nationalisation of the land, he expressed himself decidedly in favour of the inalienation of the land. There was one feature in the Land Bill which pleased him in an especial manner. He referred to the clause abolishing auction sales, and providing for long leaseholds. The area of the colony was so large and the land was so productive, that he thought sufficient revenue ought to be obtained from leases to enable the Government to pay the expenses of its working. (A Voice: "What about federation?") He was in favour of federation, on bases which would give each colony rights equal to its territory and population. He believed in an Imperial federation, and he thought there should be a bond of brotherhood between all English-speaking people. There was no necessity for any division between them, and he hoped the time would come when they would be united. He expressed himself in favour of the Soudan expedition, the moral effect of which had been great, though its military results had been small. He would support a bill for allowing freethinkers to affirm instead of taking an oath, provided they, too, accepted the responsibility attached to a committal of perjury. (Applause.)

Mr. T. Cummings, in moving that Mr. Lees was a fit and proper person to represent them in Parliament, said Mr. Lees had been connected with every progressive movement in the municipality. Practical change was needed in the constitution of their Parliament, and he asked them to return one who would do credit to them by his character and ability. He thought their candidate's political programme must commend itself to them all.

Mr. A. Walker seconded the motion, which was unanimously carried, amid cheers.

A vote of thanks was awarded to the chairman, on the motion of the candidate, the meeting terminating with cheers for the chairman, the candidate, and the Queen.

WEST SYDNEY.

MR. A. KETHEL AT THE MASONIC HALL.

On Saturday night, Mr. A. Kethel addressed a meeting of about 400 electors from the balcony of the old Masonic Hall, York-street. Alderman Graham occupied the chair.

Mr. Kethel said he had never before appeared in public on the political platform to speak on his own account, and therefore he trusted that they would extend to him the indulgence usually exercised in the case of beginners. During a life of over 30 years in West Sydney he had obtained the esteem and respect of a great number of friends, and they had formed the opinion that he possessed the necessary qualifications to fit him for a legislator. He was ready to accept that responsibility. One reason why he had come forward was, that having been a seaman for many years in this colony and elsewhere, and being familiar with the coast from Cape Byron to Cape Howe, he was qualified to exercise an intelligent judgment on every question in the Legislature, or the administration of government in connection with the mercantile marine of the colony. It was painful for anyone acquainted with seafaring matters to hear debates in Parliament on sailors and shipping, because many members were ignorant of these subjects, and consequently made blunders. The wharfage improvement of the city called for immediate attention, and also the proposal to extend the railway around the western side of Sydney. He believed it was intended to run a railway from Devonshire-street to Fort Macquarie. That might do very well for people on the eastern side, but it would not confer any benefit on the crowded streets of West Sydney. Therefore, although he held a wharf himself, he was in favour of the extension of the railway along the eastern side of the harbour from Darling Harbour, connecting with the various wharves where three parts of the intercolonial trade of Sydney was transacted. As health was of paramount importance, he would support a health bill, expunging from it anything of a too inquisitorial character, but still leaving the Government the necessary power for maintaining the health of the city. In connection with this matter he would endeavour to hurry on the water scheme, so that there would be an abundant supply both for Sydney and suburbs. He would also render whatever assistance lay in his power to bring into operation the splendid system of sewerage now nearing completion. It was as necessary for the suburbs as for the city, because Sydney was becoming filled with warehouses, and it was therefore necessary that the sewerage system should follow the people to their suburban homes. It had now become necessary to remove the abattoirs from Glebe Island. When those abattoirs were constructed over 20 years ago, the country thereabouts was a wilderness, covered with bush and scrub, and the rifle range of Balmain lay beyond it. Now Glebe Island was surrounded with population, while Balmain West and Leichhardt had also sprung up since. In their present position, the abattoirs had become a source of danger. He believed that the municipal council was taking steps to have them established at Homebush instead, and he approved of this plan. It would prevent the streets of Leichhardt and Petersham being continually filled with cattle and sheep. The slaughtering could be carried on without danger, and the steamers could bring the live stock up the river to yards. There was one matter closely connected with the welfare of the working classes of the city to which he would allude, and that was the management of friendly societies. A commission sat two years ago to inquire into and report upon their working. He might say, without vanity, that he had taken a leading and energetic part in the management of one of these societies; and while he occupied the position of chief secretary of the Manchester Unity he was the first man in New South Wales to publish statistics of sickness, mortality, and finance, as far as that Order was concerned. His example was followed by the gentleman who succeeded him: and in the course of a few years the tables they had prepared would be found of great value for actuarial purposes. As far as education was concerned, he was an advocate of the system now in existence. He believed that primary education should be national, unsectarian, compulsory, and free. To be national it must be unsectarian, because we have in our midst men of all shades of belief, and men of no belief at all; but, while it must be unsectarian, there was no need to excise from school-books the teachings of piety and religion. All theological teaching, however, should be carried on by the accredited representatives of the various religious denominations. He had devoted the leisure of several years of his life to the improvement of the Technical College. He had been a member of the committee of the School of Arts, and with the assistance of half-a-dozen gentlemen had succeeded so well that in three years its dimensions had grown to such an extent that they were unable to manage it. The Government then appointed a board for the purpose, and now the college was such that any city of the world might be proud of it. Hundreds of young people of both sexes and even men of mature years were now learning useful acquirements in it. He was a free-trader by profession; but, being such, he was an advocate for the encouragement of local industries. This might appear to be paradoxical, but he was simply telling them his belief. Between two and three years ago he decided to have a steamer built to open up trade with the northern ports. He was solicited to import a steamer at a cheap rate, but he resolved to have it built in Sydney; and the hull, the engines, and everything possible were therefore made here. If a private citizen thus fostered local industries, how much more was it incumbent on the Government, instead of sending indents for their goods to Europe and America, and getting inferior and spurious articles, to spend the public money in the workshops of the colony, even if higher prices were thereby paid. It had come to his knowledge that in the specifications for buildings erected by the Government, in the interior of the colony, the architects specified that foreign timber should be used, although the colony produced cedar and other timbers equal to any in the world. He was in favour of local option as far as the granting of licenses was concerned, but not in the case of renewals. He would not allow any Act to be passed that might be used as an engine of oppression, or that might open a door for corruption, which would certainly result if renewals of licenses were decided by local option. If compensation was granted for taking away the license of a house where the law was broken, a system of corruption would become possible for wealthy spirit merchants and brewers. If, on the other hand, it was decided to close public-houses without compensation, an unjustifiable punishment might be inflicted upon unoffending men doing their best in accordance with the law to earn an honest living. He would support a good local self-government bill, so that the public revenue might be spent where it was raised. One of the greatest humiliations that members were obliged to submit to now was going cap in hand to the members of the Government asking them to construct roads, build bridges, &c., and no country member had a chance of re-election unless he thus managed to get a share of the public money for his district. This system destroyed the self-respect of members, who were on the one hand afraid of offending the Government and on the other their constituencies. The Marine Board had control over all the mercantile marine which entered the port. The Government nominated one-half the members and the shipowners the other. None of them were responsible to the men on whom they sat in judgment. As the greater part of the commerce of the colony was carried on in steamers, it seemed strange that there was not on the board a professional mechanical engineer, either appointed by the Government or elected by certificated engineers trading to and from Sydney, so that in any investigation the working and technicalities of steam machinery might be explained to the board. With regard to the land question, he did not condemn altogether the Act of 1861, for it had brought about a large amount of settlement in the country districts. It worked well and was adapted for the time to which it belonged, but as years went on and the condition of the colony changed so the Act became unsuited to our requirements. The best features in the present Act had yet to be discovered, and it would lead to the aggregation of large areas in the hands of a few individuals. The fencing clause would act very harshly, for anyone who had been in the timbered districts would know what difficulty selectors would have to contend with to clear their land for fencing in a year or two. The expense would be more than the worth of the land, and it was a notable fact that scarcely any land had been taken up in the northern parts of the colony since this act had been passed. He was strongly in favour of the eight-hours system, and it was a proof of the thriving condition of the working classes that they had been able to bring about the present satisfactory condition of affairs. He was not in favour of importing here the sweepings of the workhouses, gaols, and slums of England and emptying them upon our streets; but he was in favour of the importation of agricultural labour, which was wanted here. For many years he had been opposed to the payment of members, but he had come to see that in a few years it would become a necessity. Men could not be expected to travel to Sydney from the outlying districts and remain here at their own expense while transacting public business. Under the present system our Parliament was composed of lawyers, land agents, and other political adventurers, who built up their fortunes on the people, and even then did not represent their views. If he went into Parliament it would be as an independent member bound to no man and tied to no party, but ready to support any measure which would have a beneficial effect on the country from whatever source it came. In answer to questions the candidate replied that no man who had extensive transactions with the Government should be a member of Parliament at all. On the motion of Mr. W. Penney, seconded by Mr. P. Hogan, a vote of confidence in the candidate was then put, and carried unanimously.

MR. ANGUS CAMERON AT GEORGE AND PARK STREETS.

On Saturday night Mr. Angus Cameron, one of the candidates for the representation of West Sydney, addressed a crowded meeting of electors from the Swan-with-two-Necks Hotel, corner of George and Park streets. Mr. John Wiley occupied the chair and introduced the candidate, who received a good hearing.

Mr. Cameron said that was the fifth time he had appeared before them for election, and he had represented them in Parliament during the last 11 years. (Cheers.) He might have made errors of judgment in his position, but he had always done the best he could in his capacity as a public man to keep New South Wales where she had always been, as the leading Australian colony. (Applause.) He had at all times endeavoured to give adherence to the party in Parliament which seemed to him to be the party of progress, and appeared before the electors to ask for a renewal of their confidence, because he had the impression that never before had the Constitution of the colony been more dangerously assailed than it was at the present time. He took this stand because, for the first time in the history of the colony, the characters, reputations, and dealings of their public men were to some little extent under a cloud of suspicion. (Hear, hear, and applause.) Three years ago the country said it required a change in the land policy. The great principle was laid down in Robertson's Land Act of 1861 that they should do all they could to open up the land by putting a healthy yeomanry on it. But they now had a change in the land law, and he wished them joy of it. By the new law half the land had been secured to the pastoral tenant for a period of 15 or 20 years, with the opportunity of selecting on the other portion, so that he was practically the master of the situation. The cry of the squatters had been, "Give us fixity of tenure, and you will get a greater rental." Well, the squatters now had fixity of tenure, and the State got a smaller rental than before; and he maintained that the new Parliament would have to amend the Land Act. (Applause.) The measure was as much Mr. Farnell's as the Land Act of 1861 was Sir John Robertson's, but the opinion the Dibbs Government held of the new Act was shown by their removing Mr. Farnell out of the people's House and sending him to the asylum for imbecile statesmen—the Upper House—(Hear, hear, and laughter)—and appointing in his place Mr. Abbot, the Minister for Mines, whose first Act was to insult Mr. Farnell so much that he felt bound resign altogether. (Cheers.) He maintained that if there was any man on the Government side of the House capable of administering the Land Act, Mr. Farnell was the man. (Hear, hear.) There was another matter of paramount importance, not only now, but to succeeding generations. They had a Government which had actually almost formed itself into a co-operative company to trade with itself. (Hear, hear, and applause.) They had had the sorry spectacle of the Minister for Works presiding over that Department and being at the same time the chief shareholder in the great carrying firm of Wright, Heaton, and Co.; in fact, presiding over the carrying department of the Government, of which his firm was the principal customer. (A voice: "That's a fact, Cameron." Cheers.) The Minister admitted that himself, but under the law no man could be a member of the Government, or take his seat as a member of the House, who was a member of a company of not more than 20 shareholders. There were only 11 shareholders in the firm of Wright, Heaton, and Co., and Mr. Wright gave shares to 10 of his clerks. That was a remarkable exhibition of benevolence—(hear, hear)—on the part of Mr. Wright; but he should like to know how much dividend those clerks got, and he should also like to know if Mr. Wright would show the books of his firm, to show how greatly enriched it had become since he took the position of Minister for Works. The Opposition demanded that Mr. Wright should be no longer Minister for Works, but the Government had made matters as bad as ever by placing him in the Cabinet as Minister for Mines, for he was now just as largely interested in the mining business as in the carrying trade. Mr. Wright at the present time was director of a coal company of which he (Mr. Cameron) was also a director, and was therefore equally unfit for the position of Minister for Mines. (Hear, hear.) But the Ministry had gone further, and taken from the ranks of the Opposition a gentleman to succeed Mr. Wright as Minister for Works. Mr. Badgery had distinguished himself in the House by a masterly silence—(laughter)—and was, perhaps, the next biggest customer the railways ever had. He was a member of the firm of Pitt, Son, and Badgery, and he had heard Mr. Badgery complain in Parliament of the insufficiency of means for bringing his firm's stock to the Homebush saleyards by rail. Was it right that a man in such a position should be Minister for Works? (Voices: "No." Cheers.) Referring to the Standard Paint Company, he said he would take the admissions of Ministers themselves—(hear, hear)—and the facts admitted by the Ministers were these: A man tendered for painting, and his tender was the lowest. The tender ought to have been accepted, so that he might start work in January of this year, but Ministers held back the acceptance of tenders till February 1. In the meantime the Standard Paint Company was found to exist—(A voice: "Colonial industry")—oh, very much so—(laughter)—and the secretary of that company waited on the successful tenderer, saying that he had a great deal of influence with the Government, and that if the tenderer would use their paints his tender would be accepted. The Standard Paint Company consisted of 23 shareholders. Three of them were named Dibbs—he thought they had heard the name before—(laughter)—one was Alexander Stuart, two of them bore the name of Cohen, and one was Mr. Charles Stokes—(Sir Alexander Stuart's partner in the firm of Towns and Co.)—and one was Hudson. Was that the sort of game they were going to allow to be carried on. (Cries of "No.") Then there was the tender for the temporary water supply, which was let to Hudson Brothers for £68,000 without any tenders being called. (Hear, hear.) Was a Government that could act in such a such way the sort of Government they would like maintained? (Cries of "No.") Ministers were shareholders also in the Barbed Wire Company; but there was one peculiarity about this wire—it would not barb. (Laughter.) It was exactly on the same level as the dump cars in that respect; they had only one failing, which was that they would not dump. (Laughter.) Another peculiarity about these matters was, that the firm of Wright, Heaton, and Co. are the representatives in this colony of the Barbed Wire Company, and G. R. Dibbs and Co. for the dump cars. He had seen an American paper which referred readers to Mr. Dibbs in this colony for information respecting these dump cars, but he thought Mr. Dibbs knew as much about dump cars as a healthy bullock does about astronomy. (Laughter and cheers.) It required prompt and unanimous action on the part of electors to prevent this sort of corruption being continued. (Hear, hear.) He condemned the Government for the perpetration of what he termed a trick, in making the nominations and the elections for the metropolitan division on the same days. Their reason for the trick was to prevent the exposure of their defects by not giving sufficient time. (Interruption.) The Government had thrown over the man who did all their hard work. Mr. Dalley (cheers) had done all the hard work connected with the Soudan expedition. It was he who had given the exhibition of flag-flying and trumpet-blowing, and he hoped they would never see a similar one again. (Cheers and counter cheers, and a voice: "Who will have to pay for it?") The people would have to pay for it. The members of the Government had dissipated the revenue to such an extent that taxation would have to be resorted to. (Hear, hear.) The Government made a promise to call Parliament together in May. The promise was made in the Assembly by Mr. Dibbs, and afterwards repeated by Mr. Dalley in the Council; but they kept members dangling from time to time, and did not meet the House till September 8, when Parliament was to expire by effluxion of time on December 28. And they had the unblushing impudence to bring down a Local Government Bill of over 400 clauses, which it was impossible to consider in the time. In addition to that, they brought in a Public Health Bill, exhibiting such lamentable ignorance that they introduced a bill with money clauses into the Legislative Council, and when they found out their mistake they were going to cut out the money clauses and send the measure down to the Assembly in that hackneyed condition. They also wanted to pass the Estimates; but Mr. Gladstone (probably the greatest authority on such matters) says that a Parliament that has already voted supplies for the whole period of its existence has no right to touch the money of another Parliament. (Hear, hear.) He, for one, insisted on the Government appealing to the country, and they were compelled to dissolve Parliament. (A voice: "A good job, too." Applause.) Some persons said that Parliament was dissolved because of the obstruction of the Opposition; but where was the obstruction? No Government had been so leniently dealt with as they were in the matter of the Land Bill, which they took 12 months to prepare and 13 to pass. An amendment was proposed on the address in reply in exactly the same words as Mr. Stuart used on an occasion when Parliament had many months to run, while this Parliament had less than four. That amendment was lost, and Mr. Garvan raised the constitutional question as to Mr. Wright's position, and that was debated only two nights, and that in a House of 118 members. Would any man say there was anything like obstruction there? Then several notices of motion were given, but the Government did not like them. There were the dump cars, Standard paints—(A voice: "And the oyster beds.") They wanted to take away the oyster beds; but Mr. Dibbs was frightened at the idea of making his statement to the country, for he knew that their actions had dissipated the revenue and made a deficit, when they had come into office with two and a-half million surplus, and they had borrowed eleven million since. (Interruption.) The Government had told the people that the Soudan expedition was going to make the colony a nation, but the first result of that advertisement was that they could not float their loan; and now, after an interval, it had been floated at a price lower than for a long time past. And the colony had been saddled with that handsome incubus of the "old man of the sea"—a standing army. (Interruption.) The Government could have passed the Noxious Trades Bill and the Patents Bill without any difficulty, the latter bill removing many existing disabilities, but that did not suit their book. They now had a Government. Heaven save the mark! They all knew the new Premier. Of course he had never encouraged cheap labour. (Laughter, and cries of "What about the Chinese?") They all remembered the Chinese strike, and Mr. Dibbs' action in connection with it. (Interruption.) They had replaced Mr. Dalley by a man who had never been in Parliament, who was without any political experience, and whose chief recommendation was that he was leading junior counsel. Then they had Mr. Badgery as Minister for Works, a man who in the most dramatic fashion introduced into the House Mr. Varney Parkes, and was such a strong Oppositionist that he would not have him sworn in on the Ministerial side of the House. (Cheers and laughter.) The Government had passed a Civil Service Bill, which would require to be repealed, or they would have an army of State pensioners. (Hear, hear.) The Act had already cost £150,000 and would cost more every year. The Civil servants were as good a body as they would find anywhere, but they only had a right to be treated as simple citizens and nothing more. Under the present Act they would make the Civil servants such a power that any man who said one word against them would not be able to get into Parliament. (Hear, hear.) Let the colony pay the men well, so that they could lay by a penny for a rainy day. (Hear, hear.) The programme of the new Government was that shadowed in the Governor's speech. They were to have a Local Government Bill and a Noxious Trades Bill. A short while ago, when the abattoirs were proposed to be closed, Mr. Badgery said that before that should be done he would hurl Mr. Dibbs from power, but in the course of a few days he forgot all about that, and joined the tyrant he had denounced. He wondered how Mr. Dibbs and Mr. Badgery would agree about the abattoirs. (Hear, hear.) He thought that if they were to have an Upper House it ought to be elective. He also referred to the tenders for cartage of the water pipes, as another instance of the way in which the Constitution of the colony had been violated. The Constitution had been violated in reference to the manner in which the Government kept its supporters. There had been more iniquitous log-rolling in this Parliament than the colony had ever seen. The Glen Innes to Grafton railway line was one, and the surveyors on it had to be lowered by ropes to make their survey. The railway from Golong to Burrowa was another instance, and the Government had spent the people's money till they had bought members' votes, and it had come to this, that one member would say to another, "Look here, old man, if you will vote for my railway I will vote for yours." He referred to the purchase of Paling's property at £1350 per foot, the highest price ever offered. The land was bought to make a roadway past the new Post-office, but the property did not adjoin the Post-office, and then only ran half way from George to Pitt streets. The Government had had to repudiate the bargain, but the offer had fixed the fancy price for another piece of land next the tower, owned by a syndicate largely consisting of members of Parliament. He asked them to give him their support; that he might be one to put an end to this sort of thing, and to assert the principle, that no man shall be allowed to occupy the position of a Minister who is a customer of the department over which he presides, and to maintain the purity of Parliament. (Cheers.)

In answer to questions, Mr. Cameron stated that he was in favour of payment of members. He thought that people had an undoubted right to say whether there should be more public-houses or not, but he would not vote for the application of the principle of local option to renewals, and the local option vote ought to be taken on the electoral rolls of the colony. (Cheers.) He had always been against assisted immigration. He was in favour of placing householders on the municipal roll. He was a free-trader, but reminded them that he was the first to obtain at an increased price the manufacture of locomotives in this colony, and he was always prepared to give the fullest fair play to local manufacturers, but was not going to vote for indiscriminate protection to tax the food, the clothes, and the tools of working men.

Mr. George Goldie proposed—"That Mr. Angus Cameron is a fit and proper person to represent West Sydney in the Parliament of New South Wales." The motion was seconded by Mr. George Woods, and carrie[d] by a large majority.

ST. LEONARDS.

SIR HENRY PARKES AT ST. LEONARDS.

Sir Henry Parkes addressed a meeting of electors of St. Leonards on Saturday night from the balcony of Darton's hotel. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. Waterhouse, and there was a large attendance.

The Chairman said it afforded him much pleasure to preside that evening, and he was sure they were all gratified at the opportunity of hearing Sir Henry Parkes address them. That gentleman had studied their interests to a large extent, and particularly with regard to the North Shore bridge, and he hoped they would give him a fair hearing.

Sir Henry Parkes, who was favourably received, said that the business of the present election was fraught with momentous consequences to them and to all their children. Unless he was unable to read the signs of the times, and unless he was incompetent to form a judgment on the situation, the issue to be decided was whether their free institutions were to be worked out in accordance with constitutional government, or whether they were to be worked out in the interests of a particular set of men. He felt a deep regret—and he was sure they would sincerely share in it—that the veteran leader of the people, his brave old friend, Sir John Robertson, was confined to a bed of sickness, and was unable to take his part in this great struggle. This at the present juncture was a public misfortune, and he would ask them to testify their sympathy for this old servant of the people by giving three hearty cheers for him. (Cheers.) He had tried that morning to read in the daily papers the speech which had been delivered to them by Mr. Dibbs last night.

A Voice: It was too hot for you.

Sir Henry Parkes: He was unable to get through more than a third of it, because other things had engaged his attention, and he could not return to it. He was not going to say very much on the subject. He was sorry that the gentleman who had arrogated to himself the position of Premier—(hear, hear)—a position he could not recognise—should have so far forgotten to assume some kind of dignity as to indulge in mere abuse of other people. When Mr. Dibbs tried to set himself up as a public castigator he simply sank to the level of a blackguard. (Hisses, and hear, hear.) Last night, too, another gentleman—he meant Mr. Wright—also indulged in unlicensed abuse of him. Now in his early life he read that intensely interesting story "Oliver Twist," and he remembered how entranced he was with some of the lurid and terrible scenes of that story, but he never expected to live to see the character of Bill Sykes reproduced in a Cabinet Minister in New South Wales. That was very nearly all that he would say of either Mr. Dibbs or Mr. Wright. When, however, their late member, the present quasi-premier, chose to speak of his difficulty of getting elected, that gentleman ought to have remembered that he owed his election two years and eleven months ago to him. On that occasion, on a Thursday, he lost his seat for East Sydney. On the following day he was nominated for St. Leonards.

A Voice: Why did you not stand for it like a man?

Sir Henry Parkes: On the Tuesday following the polling was to take place, but on the Monday the people of Tenterfield, without his being present, elected him without opposition. He acted as fairly and honestly to the electors of St. Leonards as a man could. When he found he was elected, he posted a notice to them telling them not to waste their votes by recording them in his favour, and at the same time he told Mr. Dibbs that he had retired, and it was by that retirement Mr. Dibbs obtained his seat. And now he came to some things which affected them locally. He was not enamoured of doing local jobs for a constituency, and he had been freer than probably any man in the country of petty transactions for simply small bodies of electors. He felt that a member was elected in the interests of the whole country and all classes, and not to go into the little details of bridges and disputed selections and things of that kind. It did happen, however, that there were some questions which affected them locally, which in his judgment were great national questions; and he would say to them now that if he had remained in office during the last three years half the work would have been done towards connecting them with the city of Sydney. (Hear, hear.) That conception of his was as real as any in his life, and if he lived five years he would marry the city of Sydney with the fair bride of St. Leonards. He would make St. Leonards part of the great metropolis, and there should be no impediment whatever between them more than was to be met in driving down George-street. They knew the vile slanders which were raised in connection with the project for the bridge, and they knew how utterly his enemies had failed to produce evidence in support of their diabolical and wicked slanders. What had his opponents done in the place of his project? Not even laid on a line of steamboats. They had done nothing to supply the place of the project which the late Government were bent on carrying out. When he was in London he consulted the most eminent engineer in all England—Sir John Fowler—on the best mode of constructing this bridge, and he brought out drawings and descriptions of a bridge for connecting Sydney with North Shore, and these drawings and descriptions he left in the Colonial Secretary's Office, and no one had paid the slightest attention to them during the last three years. One thing that he had proposed to do long before he thought of addressing them was to confer upon them this incalculable blessing of a bridge, and certainly he would not lose sight of the matter.

A Voice: When you put up the bridge we will put you in. (Laughter.)

Sir Henry Parkes: He had no manner of doubt that they would put him in without any reference to the bridge whatever; but what he desired to say again was, that whether he was elected or not he attached such importance to this bridge that he would not rest until its construction was accomplished. There was one other matter which was related to them intimately, and which he regarded as of public importance, and that was the tramway; and he maintained—without going into a discussion as to where it was proposed to lay the tramway—that in regard to this work there had been a delay, and a consequent inconvenience to the people about this tramway, which was shameful. The work ought never to have been done without proper preparations for expedition, and it ought to be carried out without the confusion and inconvenience which they had suffered for months past. These were two questions in which they were concerned, and which he would do all in his power to forward and accomplish. In regard to the railway which was to be very properly brought to some point on the northern shore, he was not sufficiently informed to say which point would be best for the whole population, but he maintained that in this respect every possible inquiry should be made and every consideration given before the thing was done, and it ought to be done so as to afford the greatest amount of accommodation to the present and future population.

A Voice: What about Shepherd Smith?

Sir Henry Parkes: He heard some gentleman ask him "what about Mr. Shepherd Smith?"

A Voice: You were sent over here by him.

Sir Henry Parkes: He would ask whether after his 30 years of public service he was to be insulted in that way. He was never the tool of any man. He had met the most determined opposition, and had confronted the most formidable odds time after time, and had never yet truckled to any man living, and was he to be told by a person utterly ignorant of him and his circumstances that he was sent there by any one? He went there of his own freewill and in pursuance of a great public duty, and he would have far more ground for saying that Mr. Dibbs was amongst them at the instance of his brother, who managed the Commercial Bank, than any one had for saying that he was there at the instance of Mr. Shepherd Smith. He went there as a free citizen, and what was more as an elector of long standing of St. Leonards, and he had as much right to be there as any man in the crowd. He went there at great inconvenience to himself, and with considerable unpleasantness, because he thought the position of Mr. Dibbs ought to be contested. (Hear, hear.) He maintained—if he had any knowledge of the constitution of England, and if he had done anything to promote the good of the country which gave him a title to form an opinion—that Mr. Dibbs stood before them and [before] the country as a traitor to their constitution. He challenged the best read man in that crowd to produce one instance in all the history of England where any man had been permitted to prorogue a Parliament under such circumstances as the present, to try to form a new Ministry. (Hear, hear.) Such a thing was unknown in the history of England. No man for the last 200 years had ever advised the sovereign to prorogue Parliament with a view to dissolution, and then employed the time to patch up his own political fortunes by bringing about the formation of a new Ministry. He for one refused to acknowledge Mr. Dibbs as the constitutional Premier of this country. (Hear, hear.) It was something like the proceedings of the Czar of Russia. (Cheers.) On the 2nd October Parliament was prorogued, and the dissolution ought to have followed as speedily as possible, only taking the necessary time to arrange the elections, and nothing else whatever ought to have intervened between the first stage of the act and the last; and so far as he was concerned whenever did he try to slink away from his responsibilities by such a dodge as that? (Cheers.) He had been in office and he had retired, but he always retired manfully before an adverse majority, and he never tried to patch up his fortunes by such proceedings. (A Voice: "Yes, you have.") That ignorant man was still interfering with the meeting. (Cries of "Take no notice of him; go on, and never mind him," and applause) Now, let them see what was done. Parliament was prorogued on the 2nd October, and the name to the proclamation was Alexander Stuart. Having prorogued Parliament, Sir Alexander Stuart himself resigned. A most improper thing. Sir Alexander Stuart—(Interruption.) He begged of them to give him their patience. (Cheers.) He did not complain of Sir Alexander Stuart resigning; he did not complain of the reconstruction of the Government, but what he contended was, that if this was to be done, it ought to have been done before Parliament met on the 8th of last month, or it ought to have remained until after these elections. It was unprecedented, unconstitutional, and improper, being done in the midst of a prorogation. (Hear, hear.) And what better. Then it was for the electors to each them better (Cheers.) He would not be able that night to say much to them about what he thought ought to be carried out in the Government of this country, but he made them one unqualified promise, that before they had to record their votes he would lay before them the most complete exposition of his views as to what the Government of the country ought to be. (Cheers.) That night he had only to deal with some of the grounds on which he stood before them now. The principal of them was that he conceived Mr. Dibbs and his colleagues to be improperly in office. (Hear hear.) And if the electors tolerated this improper jugglery, their tolerance would lead to the greatest disasters in the future. [A voice: We mean to chuck him out this time.] He really did not wish to speak harsh words of anybody, for it was never pleasant to do so; but it was impossible to describe men's conduct without implying censure on themselves, and he was compelled to speak of the conduct of the gentleman who was a candidate for their suffrages. Since Mr. Dibbs had been their member, he had done very little to promote the true interests of this country; but he had done a great deal to degrade its institutions—(cheers, and expressions of dissent)—and to drag the reputation of the country through the dirt. (Hear, hear.) He would now give them one or two examples of the frightful extravagance of the late Government. There was one little item with which they were all acquainted. The Government paid, soon after they took office, the enormous sum of £1500 for telegraphing Mr. Dibbs' speech to London—(laughter); and remember that all the cheers were put in, and it was rather too much to pay 8s. or 10s. a word for cheers. (Laughter.) He maintained that if the Government had desired to lay before England the real state of the finances, and had sent a well-concocted summary of the speech, which would have cost about £80, it would have been read by hundreds of Englishmen, where the long dreary speech would be read by only one. That was a waste of public money on a small scale. But they did another thing on a gigantic scale. They stopped the construction of the Illawarra railway after the contracts were given out, by a diversion of the line which, accidentally he supposed, went through property in which Sir Alexander Stuart was largely interested. (Laughter.) He did not accuse Sir Alexander Stuart of anything improper; it might have been an accident; he knew nothing about it. (Laughter.) But that was the fact, and the result to the people was this: that a £100,000 of their money was wasted by the delay caused by this division. He now came to the Soudan business, and he did not care to say much about that—not that he was afraid to speak his sentiments, but because he did not want to take up their time. What man among them could point to any good from the expenditure of that large sum of money, and the Government had not got the money to expend, because at that moment they were terribly in debt. (A voice: "They are not the only people.") In the last Government of which he was a member, they administered the affairs of the country for four years, and they would remember, and admit, that they were four prosperous year. (Hear, hear.) The country never had a more steady course of prosperity than during that time, and his Government left in the Treasury a surplus of two and a half millions over and above what was required to meet the expenditure. He said to them now, that, whenever the financial statement was made, our present revenue would fall short of the expenditure by a million sterling. That was the state into which those gentlemen had landed the country. In less than two years they had wasted the noble surplus left them by their predecessors, and they had plunged the country into debt, which could only be paid by imposing upon the people new taxation. (Hear hear.) He had no time that night to say one word about the boasted legislation of the last two years and nine months. To his judgment that legislation had been to a large extent abortive. In the case of the lands it had been worse, because settlement on the public lands had been blocked, and the revenue which was to have been derived from the pastoral lands of the country had not come in. (Hear, hear.) He personally did not believe in their legislation; and as to their management of the public finances, it had been ruinous to the last degree, and that the people would find out when they were called upon to pay the new taxes. (A voice: "What about Farnell?") He was glad the gentleman had named Mr. Farnell, because, in his judgment, Mr. Farnell, whatever might be his faults, was a man of sterling personal character—(cheers)—and he deserved a different treatment to that which he had received. He was rejoiced that Mr. Farnell had had the public spirit, and the true sense of the treatment to which he had been subjected, to retire from the Ministry. (Cheers.) That was what he said about Mr. Farnell. That gentleman had done the right thing, and had acted like a high-minded gentleman in retiring under the most disastrous and insulting circumstances in which he was placed (Hear, hear.) (A voice: "What do you think about Mr. Abbott, the Minister for Mines?") He had nothing to say about Mr. Rabbit—(laughter)—he had no time to speak of Mr. J. P. Rabbit. (Renewed laughter). Let him go. But the electors of Gunnedah would have something to do with him, and all that the electors of St. Leonards were interested in with regard to him was that glorious mission which took him three months away from the public offices, amongst the rabbits of the western interior. (Laughter.) He had now told them in a few words why he had come to them; to enable them by their free and independent votes to say whether the course of conduct which he had very cursorily sketched, and which was represented by Mr. G. R. Dibbs, was to be tolerated by the constituencies of this country. ("No.") He said it would be a dark day for the country if it was. (A voice: "So it will.") Of all things, let them preserve the character of their Parliament. Parliamentary government was the wisest system of Government ever invented by the wit of man, if it was carried out in its integrity; but it could only be so carried out by the men in trust commanding majorities by the merits of their administration; and the moment majorities were got together by any other means Parliament was in a diseased and corrupt state. (Cheers.) The Legislature might enact bad laws, but the time would come when those laws must be repealed. Men in administrations might make bad laws, but the people could eject them. But if Parliament once became degraded, and the soul of independence taken away from it, it would take a generation and a new crop of public men to restore its purity and integrity. (Hear, hear.) As for himself, it was now more than thirty years since he was first elected for Sydney, and he was elected by a large majority to the seat which had just been vacated by the greatest man we ever had in this country—Mr. William Charles Wentworth. (Cheers.) From that day to this he had gone through nearly thirty contested elections, because he was always treading so much on men's toes that he was never allowed to walk over the course, and he was rather rejoiced at it, because he held the opinion that the man who had no enemies in the world was a man who tried to please everybody, and who had no principle in him. He had never hesitated to put his foot down firmly as he thought he had occasion, and he had made some of his bitterest enemies by refusing to soil his hands with dirty jobs for them. The man did not live who could point to any corrupt action in his public life—(cheers)—and that was perhaps the reason they were always quoting against him that he bought some statuary for the public offices without authority. No man ever accused him of manufacturing barbed wire. (Cheers.) No man ever accused him of manufacturing standard paint. (Cheers.) No man ever accused him of bringing in a dump car. No man ever accused him of putting his sons or relatives into the public offices. (Cheers.) He had appointed more of the high persons in this country to office than all the other Ministers put together, but he never put a relative of his into office. (Cheers.) His only son, he was thankful to say, had taken it into his head to battle for the people like himself. He himself had served the country, and in the highest offices, for a full generation, and there was not a man connected with him who had received one penny of the public money. He was a poor man, God knew, and he had always been a poor man; but was not that splendid evidence that he had been pure in his public life? He had once refused an office offered to him of £800 a-year, when on the same day he had to borrow £5 to buy bread for his family; and from first to last he had never studied his own interests, and the man who said he had lied in his throat. He had tried to win the honourable distinction of having served the country well, and if the measures which he had introduced and passed through the Assembly and which had become law were swept from the statute book, the statute book would be comparatively a blank. Every municipality, every Public school, every Volunteer Corps, had been established under his Acts of Parliament, and it was his Act of Parliament that enacted a strict revision of their charitable institutions. It was under his Act of Parliament that they exercised the elective franchise. It was his Act which regulated the traffic in intoxicating drinks; and he might go on enumerating measure after measure which formed such a bulk of the existing law that if they were expunged from the statute book this, as far as all leading subjects were concerned, would be a blank. His voice had been listened to by thousands where the voices of other men would not be listened to by tens, and his life had been woven for the last generation in the history of the country. At one time he so injured his health that he was brought near to death's door, and at present he was struggling as hard to gain a living for his family as he was before he entered public life. He had given them evidence of his character as a public man, and he knew that in this respect he had the respect of nearly all the best men who were opposed to him, and what was more, he had the respect of some of the best men in the world. He had the respect of some of the best men in the mother country, and he had won this by arduous labour, self-sacrifice, and doing a large amount of good to the country. When he went before them again, probably on the second occasion, he would lay before them without any reserve, and as clearly as he had language to express himself, what he thought ought to be done for the Government of this country at the present time. He did not aspire to fill the position of leader of any Government. If it came to him in the natural course of events well and good. He was ambitious of one thing, and that was to be the leader of the country in this general election, and he believed that he would render a service in this respect which would be felt in this way, that not a single man who stood up and declared his support for the Ministry would be elected for Sydney. He would maintain that the course of things during the last two years and 11 months had on the whole been disastrous to the country. He had little more to say to them that night, because he was far from being quite well, but he would thank them sincerely for the patience with which they had listened to him. He wanted nothing but a fair and dispassionate consideration of the situation, and, if they believed it was right to vote for him, why, then vote for him. If they believed otherwise, let them vote against him, but, at all events, he would ask them to vote only in the interests of their common country.

In reply to questions put by electors, Sir Henry Parkes said he should not have come there at great inconvenience to himself if he had not intended to sit for St. Leonards if elected. With regard to local option, he had introduced the principle in his act for regulating the liquor traffic. He was in favour of the principle being applied everywhere where it could be justly employed. But he would not consent to go into Parliament fettered in any way where he could not exercise his judgment as to what individual rights were. As to Mr. Wright being in the Government, what had been done was done in violation of the Constitution, and if the Constitution was not sufficient, he feared that nothing he could possibly do would be sufficient. It was for the electors to see that the Constitution was preserved in its integrity. He was entirely against the federation as proposed in the bill lately passed in the Imperial Parliament. He was in favour of the federation of the colony, but on a broad national basis, where a federal parliament could be created which would manage the general national affairs, leaving to the local parliaments the local legislation of each respective colony. He regarded the scheme which originated at the late convention, and which has been embodied in the Imperial enactment, as a mongrel system, which must break down, and so far as he was concerned he would do his utmost not to allow this colony to have anything to do with it. He would go to the poll for that electorate, and if he were elected between now and next Friday by any other constituency, he would not accept that seat, but go to the poll at St. Leonards. (Cheers.) As to whether he was in favour of an elective House, he was the only Minister who had carried two bills through the Assembly to make the Upper House elective. One of those bills was referred to a select committee in the Legislative Council, and it never came out of it; another of the bills the Legislative Council refused to receive. He was in favour of depending for our common defence upon forces raised from our own population, identified with our own homes and our own soil; and to make those forces effective he was in favour of establishing a military college, under the best instructors that could be obtained by money. He was not in favour of payment of members.

Mr. Gerard Phillips moved, and Mr. Allan Bell seconded, a motion that Sir Henry Parkes was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate.

The motion was carried with much acclamation, and the candidate having been heartily cheered, the proceedings terminated.

REDFERN.

THE HON. J. SUTHERLAND AT BOTANY.

On Saturday evening the Hon. John Sutherland addressed a large meeting of the electors from the balcony of Amos's Botany View Inn. Mr. Henry Westcott occupied the chair, and the candidate was enthusiastically received throughout the brief address which he delivered.

Mr. Sutherland apologised at the outset for an unfortunate coincidence which had rendered it necessary for him to appear before the electors and to take up their time on a Saturday night, and, under the circumstances, he would not trouble them at any great length. He had been, as most of them knew, before the constituency for just about 25 years, and to all who were then in the electorate he was thoroughly well known. (Cheers.) His principles were so equally well known that he thought it hardly necessary to travel over old ground. He was equal to any other man for local wants. (Hear, hear.) Few men had done more for the industries of the colony than he, and few had watched its history with more interest than he had. (Hear, hear.) Many of those before him were residents in that district through their employment in connection with what were termed the noxious trades, and they were likely to be removed to some other spot before long. If that step were necessary in the interests of public health, those who suffered by removal were fully entitled to compensation for their loss. If the country required their removal the country ought to pay for it in some way or another. (Voice: "What about immigration?") They appeared to multiply in Botany quite quickly enough without assisted immigration. For the last three years he had been against that principle altogether, except with regard to single men, farm labourers, and others of that class. (Voice: "We want no Chinamen.") He had voted for the bill to exclude Chinese—(hear, hear)—but undoubtedly those who were already here should receive the same protection as Englishmen. The point was that they ought never to have been allowed here at all. China could send over a million and swamp us at any time, without missing them, and in point of fact could make this colony virtually a Chinese one. ("What about the Germans?") If they had immigration at all he would not object to the Germans, who were an able and useful race. At the last election he had stated clearly and distinctly, in connection with the Land Act, that he would give the squatters upon purely squatting property a lease of from 7 to 14 years. They had done more than that, giving them 15 years and upwards; and this had been given indiscriminately—not on purely pastoral squatting land, but on some of the best areas of the colony, where there ought to be as many people, and more, than there were sheep at present. (Hear, hear.) It would not be long before something very similar to the agitations which were going on over land questions in the old country would be commenced in this country, in the way that things were going on. (Hear, hear.) They were supposed to be a free-trade colony, but he knew of nothing of the sort here. He was in favour of free-trade, if they could get it; but the fact was they were free-trade run mad, and were taxing the people to let foreigners step in and rigg the markets. He was afraid there would be no free-trade for the next seven or ten years; at all events, not under the present extravagant expenditure of public money. At the end of this year they were certain to be a million of money short. Parliament should have gone earlier before the country, in order that the people might see exactly the position of their financial affairs. (Applause.) Loans had been borrowed and simply wasted in extravagant outlays, and on works which would not pay interest on the capital invested in them. (Voice: "What about the eight hours?") Another voice: "Eight hours' work and twelve hours' play.") He was not one who believed in twelve hours' play. What was needed was eight hours' work and eight hours' sleep. For fifty years he had been a member of a trade society, and he was the first man in the colony who gave the eight-hour principle, and the first man in office who gave it to the men under him in the Works Department. They had it now, and none dare attempt take it from them. (Cheers.) Alluding to the Patent Laws, he remarked that free-trade to a man's brains was unknown in this colony, in consequence of the scandalous expenses which attached to patents. America's principle of producing by the brains of the people had made her, and that was brought about by the merely nominal fees for patent rights. Thousands were making thousands a year there as a result. Free-trade, he repeated, was the best when they could get it. (Voice: "What about the wages in Victoria?") They got lower wages there and worked longer hours. Protection on everything was the worst misfortune that could befal any country. (Hear, hear.) Limited protection upon natural products would undoubtedly do good to any country. (Hear, hear.)

In reply to questions, the candidate expressed himself as being now, as he ever had been, strongly in favor of fostering the intellects of our youths by scholarships, examinations, and the granting of means to poor men's children to rise in the world, if they showed the ability. He had laid down that principle in 1859, or 1860, and had adhered to it ever since. He was also strongly in favour of technical education, by the means of which the condition of the working classes was already beginning to be affected. The people possessed all the political power, and if they only had sufficient education to know how to use it for the benefit of the State and themselves the moneyed power would have no fear of being interfered with. It was ignorance alone which made the moneyed power dangerous. (Hear, hear.) He was a local optionist; but the present local option was a sham. Scarcely one of them had a local option vote, and he would be one to give a vote to every one who had a voice in the making of legislators. (Cheers.) Local option was the best friend of every respectable and honest publican and licensed victualler. (Hear, hear.) And as to compensation, he had never shown himself to be a repudiator in any sense of the term.

An Elector: Would you be in favour of opening the hotels on Sundays at a certain hour, say, for an hour at mid-day, so that the poor man could get his dinner beer, and do away with the present abominable sly-grog selling? The rich man can have all that he wants at his club or at home.

Another Voice: If you go in will you close up club houses from Sunday traffic the same as public-houses?

Mr. Sutherland replied that they had no right to give to one class of the community what was not given to another. (Hear, hear.)

An Elector: That is not our question, sir. You are asked if you are in favour of public-houses being opened for, say, one hour on Sunday. There are dozens of men in Botany who have to work hard all day on Sunday, whether they like it or not, and they need a drop of dinner beer, but can't get it. Will you answer the question, "Yes" or "No"?

The candidate remarked that he thought some of them got too much beer on a Sunday. Individually, although not a teetotaller, he never tasted a drop of grog on Sunday under any circumstances.

A Voice: If you were a poor man, and were compelled to work hard, as many have, you would very soon want a drop. (Hear, hear.)

In some cross-questioning which followed, the candidate said that he had always been opposed to payment of members, but nowadays it was becoming a necessity, and he would make one to pay them reasonably for their time, simply to admit of workingmen candidates being returned. (Hear, hear, and expressions of dissent.) He had seen paid members before then who actually misrepresented those who supported them; consequently their payment was reduced gradually until it ceased altogether. (Hear, hear.) Paid members were now finding places in the Imperial Parliament. The British working-man was becoming educated up to the necessary standpoint; and if he read the times aright they would eventually be found to be a very great benefit to the State. (Hear, hear.) He advocated a labour congress, whence, after obtaining a sufficient degree of political education, working-men members might be selected and returned. He was in favour of a railway from Sydney to Botany; and had years ago had plans, &c., prepared for a line to La Perouse monument.

On the motion of Mr. Alfred Hooper, seconded by Mr. Henry Ramsey, the customary vote of confidence was put, and it was carried unanimously, amid loud cheering.

Subsequently the candidate spoke from the balcony of the Waterworks Hotel; Alderman Anderson, of Waterloo, presiding. Mr. Sutherland again met with an enthusiastic reception from a large crowd, and he was frequently cheered. A unanimous vote of confidence was carried, on the motion of Mr. Court, seconded by Mr. Geddes. The proceeding were closed with cheers for the candidate and for the Queen.

DR. RENWICK AT REDFERN AND ALEXANDRIA.

Dr. Arthur Renwick addressed large and enthusiastic meetings of the electors of Redfern from the balcony of the Bellevue Hotel, Redfern, and at the Town Hall, Alexandria, on Saturday evening. Mr. John Williamson first occupied the chair, and the candidate, who was accompanied by a numerous committee, was received with cheers.

Dr. Renwick first pointed out that he had been identified with the interests of Redfern from his boyhood; he had grown to manhood amidst those whom he was addressing; he had been reared and schooled among them until he passed through the University to his medical studies in Europe. He was proud to say that he was the son of one of the working men who had caused Redfern to develop into one of the greatest and most intelligent constituencies in this colony, and he therefore made no excuse for asking them to return him to Parliament as one of their representatives. At the same time he desired it to be understood that he did not wish to be carried in on anybody's shoulders; if they did not think him worthy of the honour upon his own merits, he would willingly give place to any other candidate. He desired, also, that they should return his very old friend, the Hon. John Sutherland, with whom he had been associated in many a hard-fought political battle; with whose opinions his own were as identical as it was possible for any two men's to be, and with whom he would be only too glad to again associate in further developing the interests of this great country. They had arrived at a period of our political history at which it behoved every intelligent elector to thoughtfully exercise the franchise for the purpose of securing the best possible representation, for the country would shortly begin to experience the effect of a series of legislative blunders which must seriously affect its finances. And, although he did not intend to say one word of personal antagonism against any member of the present Ministry, he felt bound to remark that the gentleman at the head of affairs had just now shown that he was quite incapable of dealing with great financial questions. (Cheers.) New taxation would be necessary, and they should remember that it was the present Premier who had proposed a short time back to impose taxes which would not only make the working men pay a charge upon any little property which they might have accumulated, but also upon the furniture in their homes and the clothing upon their backs. (Groans.) For his part, he had always thought that the fairest way to obtain revenue was through the Custom-house—(cheers)—for in that way, with good management, the burden could be equitably borne by all classes of the community. The Land Bill, from which great results in the shape of income had been anticipated by those responsible for it, had proved a gigantic failure, as he had predicted it would be; the machinery for carrying it out was cumbrous and expensive; not one-third the income would be derived from it that was expected; it would confer benefits upon no one except a few land agents, about whom there had been some exposures recently; and it would simply render impossible the creation of a class upon which the future welfare of the country largely depended—he meant the free selectors, to whom it extended less protection and held out less inducements to settle upon the public estate than did the old law in regard to which the late Government of which he was a member had been compelled to dissolve Parliament. He had seen no reason to alter his opinion that, with certain alterations which he had advocated when previously seeking re-election, that law could have been made to serve all interests fairly. Then the Government had passed a Civil Service Bill, which was about as abortive a piece of legislation as could well be conceived. It did not satisfy the bulk of the Civil servants, because it unjustly excluded from all advantages the great mass of mechanics and others receiving small salaries, while it had placed an enormous burden upon the country in order to give increases to officials who already received large salaries. (Hear, hear.) This could not be permitted to continue, and he should do his best to so alter this Act as to make it deal fairly with all classes. (A voice: "What about the Licensing Bill?") Well, they probably knew that he was one of the vice-presidents of the Local Option League, but he believed at the same time that local option should be exercised by the mass of the people—seeing that every man, woman, and child was affected by the awful vice of intemperance, of the extent of which his medical practice had made him fully aware, and he was therefore in favour of that form of local option which would place the remedy in the hands of the people as a whole. He believed that local option should be exercised by the Parliamentary electors, and not merely by municipal voters—(cheers)—and he would fix a stated time for the vote to come into operation, so that nothing revolutionary should be done in regard to vested interests. He was and always had been a strong advocate of the eight-hours' movement, for he was convinced that in sunny New South Wales eight hours' labour was the utmost that should for physiological reasons be expected from any man, although he frequently had to work 20 and 23 himself, and in view of the present state of the labour market he was decidedly of opinion that the country should not be further taxed for the purposes of immigration. He had daily evidence that almost every department of skilled labour was overstocked, and that mechanics and artisans had extreme difficulty in providing regular employment at remunerative wages. One of his first efforts if returned would be to simplify the Patent Laws that the ingenious mechanic should not have to submit to a ruinous charge before he could derive any advantage from the product of his brain. At present the inventive genius of the colony was simply crushed out by ruinous fees, which went, not into the consolidated revenue, but into the pockets of well-paid Government officials; and hence it was that our own inventions were so limited when compared with those of America and other countries where fees for registering patents were only nominal. (Hear, hear.) And if returned he could surely be of some service to the country in regard to health legislation, which would be dealt with by the new Parliament. He might fairly claim that his scientific knowledge qualified him to deal with this great question, in which every citizen had a direct interest. He was sure that the death-rate of this great and over-crowded city, and of the colony generally, could be materially lessened, and the comfort of life increased in a corresponding degree, by proper sanitary laws; and he would do his best to have an intelligent interest brought to bear upon this important subject at an early period. (Cheers, and a voice "What about Parkes and that £500?") Well, he hoped they would lend him their ears on that matter for a moment. The simple facts were that eight months after he became a Minister of the Crown, Sir Henry Parkes became very dangerously ill, and was for the time somewhat embarrassed for ready money, and he was asked to lend him £500 which he did with much pleasure—(cheers)—and he would gladly do the same again for any great servant of the Crown who might become poor in the service of his country. (Loud cheers.) That was the history of this transaction of which he had the proofs. He would if elected lose no time in assisting to pass a local Government bill on equitable principles which would remove the great burthen of expenditure upon local wants from the central Government and place it in the hands of local administrators who would see that it was fairly dealt with in the manner most advantageous to the mass of the people. Such a measure, if properly devised, would effect an enormous saving to the country, and at the same time prevent a deal of the political jobbery which it could not be denied disgraced Parliament, and in too many instances converted the position of a member into that of a mere delegate appointed to represent local wants. (Hear, hear.) Reference having been made to the hospital, Dr. Renwick said that the sick poor of the city had a right to demand that the provision for their needs which the completion of the buildings in Macquarie-street would afford should be extended to them, and the Legislature should take care that the large sums of money expended upon those buildings, which could not properly be used for other than hospital purposes, were not thrown away. He did not wish to parade his generosity before the electors, but he thought it necessary to say that he had not hesitated to spend his own funds liberally upon those partially completed hospital buildings, which was a proof that he was conscientious in this matter, and believed that he was acting for the best interests of the suffering poor of this great city.

At the conclusion of Dr. Renwick's addresses a unanimous vote of confidence was carried, with much cheering.

GLEBE.

MR. M. CHAPMAN AT THE GLEBE TOWN HALL.

A well-attended public meeting of the electors of the Glebe took place in the local Town Hall on Saturday evening, in order to hear the views of Mr. M. Chapman, who is a candidate for the electorate.

The chair was taken by the Mayor of the Glebe (Mr. T. J. Dunn), and a large number of Mr. Chapman's supporters occupied seats on the platform. The Chairman, in introducing the candidate, said that it afforded him very great pleasure to preside over the gathering at which their late member Mr. Chapman was to explain his views and give them a short account of his past services to the electorate. Mr. Chapman was, he said, well known to the electors, as he had represented them in Parliament for the last 20 months, and during the time he had been their member he had worked hard for the Glebe. (Applause.)

Mr. M. Chapman, on rising to address those present, was received with loud cheers. After some preliminary remarks, he said he thought it was his duty to give the electors of the Glebe some slight account of his stewardship. He also wished to explain the views he held regarding certain questions which were admittedly of great importance to the electorate and to the country at large. (Hear, hear.) He was rather young in politics, but he claimed that he had done his duty. (A voice: "You have, old man," and "hear, hear.") He went into Parliament nearly two years ago as a free agent. He knew that he had the confidence of those who sent him to represent the electorate in the House. They believed that he would support those measures which would be most advantageous to the country. (Hear, hear.) He went into Parliament with the determination to get them a fair share of the money which he knew would be expended throughout the colony. He was willing to admit that it was not perhaps the duty of a member of Parliament to go in for the special purpose of getting roads and bridges; but when he saw the great scramble which was going on around him, he made an attempt to get some of the money, and threw aside his policy for the time being. (A voice: "You did quite right too.") He had succeeded in getting some of the money, as they were well aware, and the Glebe had been benefitted by the amounts which had been placed on the Estimates. (Cheers.) His first vote in Parliament was in connection with the Land Act. When they returned him he did not know much about the measure, and he did not think there were 20 members who were conversant with the Act at the time. (Hear, hear.) However, he endeavoured to acquaint himself with the provisions of the Act, and after reflection he voted for it. He characterised the bill as a good one, and he believed it had already proved beneficial to the squatters, to the free-selectors, and to the people of the colony. The dummying and forswearing carried on under the Act of 1861 were done away with, and the new system, he believed, was in many respects a good one. (Hear, hear.) Under the new Act the land leased to the squatters would, it was estimated, bring in a revenue of nearly £2,000,000 per annum, which would be a considerable increase on any former amounts received. With regard to the Soudan Expedition, he might inform them that he had voted most cheerfully with the Government on the question. (Hear, hear.) He was away in New Zealand at the time the offer of the New South Wales troops was accepted; but he was back in time to see the brave men who formed the Contingent leave Sydney on the 3rd of March. It was a sight which filled him with gladness. The enthusiasm displayed by the colonists raised them in the eyes of the world, and the movement had done the nation an immense amount of good. (Loud cheering.) It created a martial spirit in the people, and as a result of the departure of the Contingent for the Soudan, over 80 applications had been sent in from different parts of the country for the formation of volunteer corps, and the services of more than 40 volunteer corps had been accepted by the Government. (Hear, hear.) The country had hitherto enjoyed the protection of Great Britain, and he for one was quite willing to vote the sum of money necessary to cover the cost of the expedition. He thought it was the least they could do in return for the many benefits which Great Britain had bestowed on them as a people. (Cheers.) He would not say whether the war at which our men left their native shores to fight was a just or an unjust one; but he believed the people of New South Wales had but one motive in sending the Contingent to the Soudan, and that was the noble motive of affording some help to the mother country, which it was believed required their assistance at the time. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) He had supported the late Ministry when he thought they were in the right; but he had opposed them on the federation question. Federation would be brought about some day; but he was of opinion that the whole of the country, and not a Government, should decide upon the matter. He was strongly in favour of the Noxious Trades Bill, which he thought would be a most beneficial measure. Those engaged in the avocations of bone crushing and boiling, and glue-making should be protected. (Hear, hear.) The piece of land, the area of which was some 1500 acres, that had been reserved for the noxious trades at Cape Solander on the southern side of Botany Bay would be near the Illawarra line, and it would also be within easy reach of Botany. Those engaged in the noxious trades conferred a great benefit upon the people of the city by clearing away the offal and refuse of Sydney. They took away no less than 200 tons of offal from the butchers and 130 tons from hotels and restaurants during one week. They were the best scavengers they had, and they ought to be protected. (Hear, hear.) He was in favour of the Health Bill, which was badly needed. He hardly liked the constitution of the boards. He did not see the necessity of placing the people under the control of half-a-dozen medical men—they were too much doctored already. (Cheers.) However, he would give his support to a good health bill, a bill for amending the patent laws, and a local government bill. He had long felt the necessity which existed for a good Local Government Bill. Electorates and municipalities should be allowed to spend the money which they raised by taxation. They understood their own wants best, and they ought to have the right of looking after their own affairs and spending their own money. (Hear, hear.) As to the constitution of the Upper House, he held that one-third of the members should be nominees, the other two-thirds should be elected, and they should retire with the members of the House of Assembly. (Hear, hear.) He totally disagreed with members of Parliament taking the position of land agents, and he would endeavour to put a stop to that sort of thing. (A voice: "That's right, hit out straight, Chapman," and cheers.) He thought a Minister should be appointed for Railways and Tramways, and the other public works should be placed under the supervision of another gentleman. It was a mistake to appoint one man to the office of Minister for Works at the present time; one man was totally unable to keep abreast of the work. (Hear, hear.) He was strongly in favour of the eight hours movement, and he had voted with Mr. Copeland in favour of a grant being made towards the erection of a trades hall. (Cheers.) Suburban railways were badly wanted, and, although he would support the extension of the railway into the city, he would rather see more accommodation provided for their rapidly-increasing suburbs. They would follow the example of Melbourne in the matter of suburban lines. He would do all he could to obtain better sewerage arrangements for the Glebe, and a good supply of water. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Chapman then adverted to the many improvements which had been effected in the electorate during the time he had been their representative, and concluded a lengthy address by stating that if they returned him to Parliament he would always endeavour to serve them faithfully and well. The candidate was loudly cheered at the conclusion of his remarks.

In answer to questions, Mr Chapman said he was a Free-trader; he was in favour of payment of members; he was not in favour of abolishing the Transit Commissioners. The eight-hour system should, he said, be made applicable to all railway employees, and he was in favour of making the eight-hour system universal throughout the colony. He considered that eight hours was quite long enough for any man to work in this country.

Mr. J. Barnett moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting considers Mr. M. Chapman to be a fit and proper person to represent the electorate of the Glebe in the forthcoming Parliament."

Mr. W. T. Pinhey, J.P., seconded the motion, and prognosticated the return of Mr. Chapman at the head of the poll on the election day. The speaker said he had no hesitation in saying that Mr. Chapman had done his duty in a faithful and satisfactory manner. He had worked hard for the electors of the Glebe, and he thoroughly deserved their support.

Other gentlemen supported the resolution, which was then put to the meeting, and carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a conclusion.

DR. WILKINSON'S MEETINGS.

A large meeting of the friends and supporters of Dr. W. C. Wilkinson was held on Saturday, at half-past 7 o'clock, at Williamson's Excelsior Hotel, Lyndhurst-street. The chair was occupied by Mr. Henry Daly, who in a forcible speech introduced the candidate. Dr. Wilkinson then addressed the electors. He was listened to with marked attention throughout, and a unanimous vote of confidence proposed by Mr. Benjamin Hocking, and seconded by Mr. Linsey Holman, was passed in his favour. A second meeting took place at 9 o'clock, at Harris' Town Hall Hotel, St. John's-road, where a large number of the electors had assembled. The candidate was well received, and a vote of confidence in him carried unanimously.

NEWTOWN.

MR. J. F. SMITH AT DARLINGTON.

On Saturday night Mr. J. F. Smith (Mayor of Newtown), who is a candidate for the representation of the Newtown electorate, addressed a meeting of the electors of Darlington from the balcony of Watson's Hotel, corner of Cleveland-street and Newtown-road. The chair was occupied by Mr. Henry Dixon, who briefly introduced the candidate.

Mr. Smith, who was received with applause, said it was incumbent upon him as a new candidate to place before the electors the position he occupied in the contest. He would be new to parliamentary life, but was not new to public life. He was not identified with any political party, nor yet with any of the candidates at present in the field—he was perfectly independent. (Cheers.) There was no doubt, however, that there should be a party in the Parliament of the country, there should be a Government and a strong Opposition. (Applause.) Party politics, in his opinion, was good for the country. (Cheers.) Now, for the first time in the history of the electorate, Newtown was entitled to elect three representatives, and at the request of a number of the electors he had determined to become a candidate for one of the positions. (Cheers.) He would therefore ask the electors to exercise the franchise to the fullest extent, and to elect three representatives whose opinions coincided. It would not be right for them to select men holding different views. They had already had enough of that, and had found that it did not work for their benefit. (Applause.) He trusted they would elect men who were well qualified to represent them. The Parliament recently prorogued and subsequently dissolved was in such a disorganised state that it was impossible that it could conduct the business of the country—hence the general election which had come upon them like a thunderclap. During the last short session there were many things brought to the light of day which did not redound to the credit of the Ministers of the Crown. (Applause). One very important matter dealt with by the late Parliament was the new Land Bill. (Applause.) For many years he was an admirer of Sir John Robertson's Land Act of 1861. (Applause.) That Act had done much good for the colony of New South Wales. (Applause.) No doubt certain abuses crept in under that Act owing to the manner in which it was administered—hence the cry which was raised against it, and the displacing of Sir Henry Parkes and his party. Then they had the Stuart Government, introducing a new Land Bill, which had been passed by a large majority, and was now in operation as an accomplished fact; but the most vital principle of the bill—the selection of land—had only come into operation after some eight or nine months delay. From what they had seen in connection with the administration of the new Land Act, it was quite clear that it was not all that was requisite. (Cheers.) He was not, however, so unwise as to admit that they should wholly undo that Act and go back to the Act of 1861. It was possible to make it workable in the interests of the people—(cheers)—and he believed, after giving it a reasonable trial, all its defects would come glaringly before the public, and it would then be the duty of their new legislators to remedy those defects. Another matter which he wished to call attention to was that in connection with the contract given by the late Government to the firm of Messrs. Hudson Brothers. (Applause.) He referred to the temporary water supply. (Applause.) That was a most unfortunate piece of business for the Government and the country. The thing was simply a toy, and the money spent in connection with it was simply wasted—(applause)—and could have been better expended in pushing on the works in connection with the permanent water supply. (Cheers.) If it was absolutely necessary that the work should be done then the Government should have submitted the contract, involving as it did such a large expenditure, to public competition. (Cheers.) All such expenditure should be submitted to public competition, and no Ministry individually or collectively had a right to dispose of the public money without competition. (Cheers.) That was only one of the many abuses that had crept in under the last Government. There was also the matter connected with the acceptance of tenders for painting public buildings and other public works in the colony. A clause was inserted in a certain contract having for its object the using of one particular kind of paint for this work. He had no particular objection to the products of the country being used on the works of the country; but he had an objection to any of the companies of which Ministers of the Crown were shareholders or directors, having the exclusive right to supply such products. (Cheers.) That was a dangerous thing to allow in connection with the administration of public affairs. (Cheers.) Then there was the barb wire business—(applause)—which was even worse than that to which he had already alluded, because the gentleman at the head of the late Government was a large shareholder in the company. He had been told on good authority that a large quantity of good substantial fencing had been removed in order that this barb wire might be used. A very important matter which the new Parliament would have to deal with was the Local Government Bill. For many years he had held the opinion that the colony of New South Wales should be incorporated, and that the shire council principle, or provisional board principle of Queensland, should be introduced in connection with local works, such as the making of main roads and the construction of bridges. Such works should be in the hands of the people, for they would be able to carry them out much cheaper and much better. (Applause.) He believed the time had arrived for applying the principle of local government to the metropolitan area. Greater powers and privileges should be given to municipalities. Many works which the Government now had in their hands should be carried out by local authorities, who have a better knowledge of their own requirements. In his opinion many of the provisions of the Public Health Bill should be incorporated in the Local Government Bill or Municipalities Act. There were two things which should be attended to at once, viz., the water supply and also the work of making provision for a proper system of sewerage. (Applause.) When these matters were brought into existence, the business of inspection and so forth should be placed in the hands of local authorities. (Cheers.) Another very important matter was the Civil Service Act, which had been recently brought into operation. He was opposed to the system of pensions and gratuities. (Cheers.) But he was on the other hand in favour of paying civil servants adequately for their services, in order that they might make provision for their families. (Cheers.) As they had the measure, they would have to make the best of what they had got. The Act did not work fairly for all sections of the service, and would require to be amended; and if returned to Parliament, he would be prepared to give it his serious attention, and would endeavour to make it as equitable as possible. (Cheers, and a Voice: Repeal the law.) He was a thorough believer in the present education system—(cheers)—and he was liberal enough in his views to make that Act as compulsory, and also as free, as it was possible to make it. (Cheers.) He had been a member of No. 4 school board of their district, and had had a good deal of experience of the working of the Act. He had been chairman of the board for the last two years, and he would in no way be a party to interfering with the Act. (Cheers.) He believed in the extension of the city railway, and many years ago was member of a league which had for its object the extension of the railway into the city. That movement would receive his heartiest support. He was opposed to some of the railways and to the railway policy of the late Government. Many lines proposed were only proposed for political purposes—one in particular, the line from Grafton to Glen Innes. (Applause.) This line, it had been said, was unsafe to travel over by night, and consequently night trains were denied. What could be more monstrous than spending such a large sum of money in constructing a railway which could not be used for the people's comfort and convenience? He was in favour of opening up the country with railways, for without railways many of their pastoral, agricultural, and mining districts now in full swing would not have progressed. (Cheers.) In conclusion Mr. Smith referred to a number of local requirements. He said when the question of blocking the Newtown-road was brought forward the Darlington people were invited to co-operate, inasmuch as it was thought that they would participate in the work. Unfortunately, however, the blocking terminated at Blyth-street, but if returned to Parliament he would use his power and influence to induce the Government to extend the work, and also to do good blocking on all their tram lines, instead of wasting money as they were at present doing. (Applause.) The management of the railways should be placed in the hands of an independent board. If that was done it would not be possible for Mr. Wright, or Wright, Heaton, and Co., to derive advantages which it had been said they had derived under the present railway system. All persons should have an equal right to participate in the advantages to be derived from the railways. (Applause.) He was a believer in the eight-hour system. (Cheers.) In the year 1872 he had the courage to attempt to introduce the principle into the borough council of Newtown; he got into much disgrace over it, and had to contest an election in consequence, but he was successful, and in 1875 the principle was introduced by him, with the assistance of the aldermen. (Cheers.) He would, if possible, extend the boon to all persons, for he considered that with such a climate as they possessed eight hours was long enough for any man to work. (Cheers.) He intended to be fair with all parties in the coming election, and might say at once with regard to the question of local option, that he could not and would not go for full local option. He would adhere strictly to the principle as it was at present carried out, but he could be no party to the extension of the principle in the way in which it was sought to be extended by a section of the community. The time had not arrived for that, and it would not be right for the country to turn round now and annihilate people who had been induced or compelled to spend thousands of pounds to bring their hotels up to the standard and requirements of the Act. (Applause.) He was in favour of the Upper House on its present basis. It was wise to have an Upper House, as it was a check upon hasty legislation. He should support the principle upon which the Upper House was at present based. He was not in favour of payment of members, and could not vote for it. He should have another opportunity of addressing them. If they believed he possessed the ability to serve them in the Parliament of the country of which he was a native, then he had a claim upon their votes, and he trusted that on polling day they would to a man record their votes in his favour. (Cheers.)

Mr. Alexander proposed the following resolution,—"This meeting is opinion that Mr. J. F. Smith is a fit and proper person to represent the electors of the Newtown electorate in the forthcoming Parliament."

Mr. Macaulay seconded the resolution, which was unanimously carried.

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman and cheers for the Queen.

MR. W. J. FOSTER AT MACDONALDTOWN.

Mr. W. J. Forster, who was one of the representatives for Newtown in the Parliament which preceded the last, and is now a candidate for the suffrages of that constituency, addressed a meeting of the electors from the balcony of Wright's Imperial Hotel, Macdonaldtown, on Saturday evening. The chair was occupied by Mr. James Pemell, J.P.

Mr. Foster, who spoke under the disadvantage of hoarseness, said that on the last occasion he appeared before them, soliciting their suffrages, he was not a fortunate candidate, although he had represented that electorate for some time previously. He, however, accepted his defeat, and saw in it no reason why it should make them any the worse friends. That was the view he had taken of his rejection, and that was the principle he had acted upon with regard to it. Now, he was pleased to say there was a great change in the surroundings of his candidature, and he was gratified to know that many who on the last occasion took a prominent part in bringing about his defeat were on the present occasion among his most active supporters. (Hear, hear.) Under those circumstances he came forward with very considerable confidence, and he hoped that on next Friday he would be in a very different position to that which he occupied at the close of the last polling. In soliciting their suffrages it was but right that he should state what his opinions were, what he had done, and what he was prepared to do. They knew that he had already served them for six years, and he had no hesitation in saying that, with regard to any act of his during that period which they might choose to bring forward, if he could not account satisfactorily for his conduct he was perfectly willing to go back again to private life. When he last appeared before them, although a great many things were unfairly laid to the charge of the gentlemen with whom he was then associated, he did not know that a single thing was laid to his charge. Certainly not one of the gentlemen who were candidates laid anything to his charge that was true or damaging to him. Well, he thought that a man's previous record was of importance on an occasion like the present—(hear, hear)—because what a man had done he would probably do again. Well, his intention, he might say, was to try and do very much the same as he had done before—that was to say, to try and make himself as useful as possible in regard to any legislation which took place, and to do so in as impartial a manner as he possibly could. At the present time one of the most likely questions, and at the same time one of the most reasonable and the fairest to ask any candidate submitting himself to the electors, was, What is your general opinion of the political situation? Well, in regard to any inquiry of that kind, he did not think he ought to mince matters, because if he did not honestly tell them his opinions now they could have but very little confidence in him in the future. Well, he could tell them that his confidence was absolutely less than nothing in the present Government. He believed they had forfeited all right to the confidence of the people of New South Wales. (Hear, hear.) He did not wish to make any attack upon the present Ministry, because he thought that the position in which they found themselves—quarrelling amongst themselves, and deserted by some of those who had hitherto supported them—was sufficiently humiliating. He did not wish to add to the position of humility in which they found themselves. With nearly all the members of the present Administration he had been on terms of friendship. Although he had sometimes had to say severe things about them, and to say them in a severe way when he believed wrong was being done, he would on the present occasion avoid them as much as possible. As to the position of a legislator, he thought it was the duty of gentlemen in the House to endeavour to cultivate gentlemanly feelings of friendship with all with whom they were associated, provided that their political companions did not forfeit the right to such a privilege by impropriety of conduct. Now, what should he say of the present Ministry? It seemed to him that they were a sort of fag end of a Ministry. He could hardly call them a Ministry at all. He did not believe that they were even complete in their numbers. The work of their construction had hardly been completed, and yet the public now learned that one of them had been compelled to withdraw because of the quarrelling which had been going on amongst themselves. If those gentlemen were unable to agree amongst themselves, and to manage what might be termed their own affairs, they certainly would not be able to manage the affairs of the country. He had other grounds than that of the peculiar position they now occupied in the eyes of the public to quarrel with them for. They, supported by the newspapers throughout the colony, went into office on the plea of their Land Bill policy—they went in to pass a Land Bill, and that Land

Bill was to be the glory of the colony. That measure was to make them worthy of all gratitude; and, according to some of the newspapers, it made them worthy of the gratitude of every constituency in the colony. According to their own plea, they had passed an Act which was satisfactory to the community, and yet the very gentleman in whose hands it was—who piloted it through the House—felt himself to be in such a position that he dare not present himself to any constituency in the whole of the colony of New South Wales. He was self-condemned in regard to what he had done. The Ministry, therefore, deserved no credit for the Land Act. He did not mean to say that there were not in it good provisions; but he did say that, considered altogether, it did not deserve the commendation of the people. (A voice: "It's a squatter's bill.") It was undoubtedly a squatter's bill, and the best proof of that was that it was supported throughout by the squatters. The measure was against the interests of the working classes, and was in favour of those who were squatters. A free selector who happened to be on the portion of the run that had now been secured by lease to the squatter, was not allowed to increase the area of his selection. It might be only 40 acres in extent, and even although he might find that it was too small for him, and had been encouraged to save money for increasing it, he would not be allowed to do so. All that he could do was to hand it over to the squatter for whatever price the latter might choose to give for it. However, he supposed they did not care much about the Land Act, but would feel more directly interested in the question of local government. He believed that the most important measure Parliament would have to consider in the future was a local government bill. The power of municipalities to govern themselves was one of the most valuable rights people had acquired in modern times. It was useful not only to prevent undue patronage in the hands of the Government, but in helping to educate the people, and to make each man feel that he might rise to the position of a legislator. He believed that one or more bills would have to be brought in to enable the Government to place the whole of the colony under local government administration. He was in hopes that the municipalities now in existence would be strengthened, their rights enlarged, and that they would to a certain extent be provided with moneys from the State coffers to enable them to carry out the duties entrusted to them. At the same time he trusted that their powers would not be made too absolute, because every power once placed in a municipality was a kind of surrender. Municipalities ought simply to be invested with those powers necessary to enable them to act for the public good. (A voice: "What do you think about local option?") Well, he thought it was pretty generally known that he had always been one of the strongest supporters of every measure designed to suppress intemperance and assist the people in living soberly and properly. (An elector exclaimed with peculiar emphasis: "I believe you there.") He would always do all he possibly could to promote the welfare of the people, but he would never consent to interfere unduly with the liberty of any man. (Hear, hear.) Whilst he would do his utmost to promote sobriety and temperance, he would always do what he had hitherto done, namely, be careful to respect the rights of individuals. And he would continue to endeavour to promote every kind of legislation that tended to benefit the working man and to benefit the community at large. He had always been a supporter of the eight-hour system and of early closing; not that he cared one farthing whether it pleased the mob, but because he believed that the highest duty of man was to endeavour to elevate his fellow-man as much as he possibly could. He was sorry to have noticed that it had been the case for the Government to treat certain representatives of constituencies in a way they ought not to be treated—with contempt. He had never been treated in that way, and he trusted that, if he went into the House—and he had no fear of not being sent in—he would maintain the position of their representative in such a way that no Government would ever dare to treat him with contempt. (Hear, hear.)

In reply to one elector who asked what Mr. Foster thought of the question of payment of members, the candidate replied he believed the honour of representing a constituency ought to be sufficient to induce any man who was fit for the position to come forward and offer his services to an electorate. Of course they might sometimes find a difficulty in the case of a worthy working man who would make an excellent representative; but he did not think any change should be attempted which might encourage enterprising and unscrupulous men to impose upon the community.

In reply to another elector who desired to hear something about protection to native industry, the candidate said he was a free trader, and he did not believe in the imposition of a duty on raw material required in this colony for manufacturing purposes. He considered it was unjust to use either protection or free trade to the detriment of the community. As to the manufacture of colonial iron (raised by another inquirer) he thought if it could be done without damage to the community, it ought to be done to encourage native production. He did not see any reason why the public should not be entitled to purchase articles from any country in the world as cheaply as they could. (A Voice: What is to become of the working man?) He would be very glad to help the working-man to attain the position he believed every working-man was entitled to; but in order that he might get into a higher position he did not think that the rest of the community should pay a very high price to enable him to do so. In reply to another inquiry, as to immigration, Mr. Foster said that this colony wanted population, but it was necessary that it should be selected, and the arrival of the people timed so as not to swamp the colony. The colony was suffering from the want of a supply of men who could be useful to themselves and to the community.

On the motion of Mr. Daniel Henry, seconded by Mr. William Crane, J.P., a vote of confidence in Mr. Foster as a fit and proper person to represent the electorate was carried unanimously.

Cheers for the Queen terminated the proceedings.

CENTRAL CUMBERLAND.

MR. H. W. STATHAM AT CASTLE HILL.

Mr. H. W. Statham declared himself a candidate for Central Cumberland at Castle Hill on Friday evening in response to the call of a number of fruitgrowers who had attended Mr. M'Culloch's meeting. He offered to address them on the following Monday, but as they expressed themselves opposed to any further delay he consented to comply with their request. Mr. Tuckwell, of the North Road, was voted to the chair.

Mr. Statham explained his conduct from the date of the public meeting at the Woolpack Hotel, Parramatta, when he was instructed to plot out the project of the New South Wales Fruit Co. until the present time, when he declared his willingness to become the fruitgrowers' candidate. He dwelt at some length on the fruit question from his connection with it for the last three years, and regarding his efforts, much of which have appeared in print, to induce the growers to co-operate for their own benefit. He explained that as an advocate of their interests, beyond the honour he felt in representing them so far, he had not received anything for his trouble, and as he felt pleasure, but not without prospective advantage to himself and themselves, in the work he had undertaken. He went on to say that owing to the addition of a third member for their electorate, he had the honour to offer himself for their suffrages. He was personally acquainted with most of them through his persistent advocacy of the wants and rights of the fruitgrowers during the last three years. A new Government was now on its trial, and when their policy was developed he should, if elected, give his support to matters which, in his opinion, would tend to the greatest good to the greatest number and advance the interests of his native country. He had had 25 years' practical experience of squatting and farming, Government departmental routine, commercial relations generally, and had lately made himself acquainted with the interests of the working classes, especially with regard to the creation of a department of agriculture.

After the candidate had replied to several questions, a vote of confidence in him was unanimously agreed to.

COUNTRY ELECTION MEETINGS.

[By Telegraph.]

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

ALBURY, Sunday.

Mr. Luke Gulson addressed the Albury electors on Saturday night at the Mechanics' Institute. Mr. C. Jackson occupied the chair, the room was well filled, and the candidate met with a favourable reception. In giving a statement of his political opinions, Mr. Gulson said that he was a freetrader from conviction. He had studied the histories of all countries of the world, and had read most of what had been written by leading authorities on both sides of the question, and it seemed to him that, other things being equal, the balance of prosperity was on the side of those countries adhering to free-trade principles. If protectionists could show him a country where the adoption of their principles had brought about better results, he would be content to change his views. He did not consider, however, that the so-called free trade of New South Wales was any more than bastard free trade, as the railways, which were made by the contributions of the whole of the people, were so constructed as principally to benefit Sydney, whilst goods were carried from Sydney to Wagga Wagga at the same rate as was charged for conveying merchandise from Albury to Wagga Wagga. He would not claim this to be a free trade country, as the maintenance of the differential rates was, in fact, protection of the most rabid type in favor of the Sydney merchants. Referring to payment of members, the speaker said the principle on the face of it seemed the natural sequence of a democratic institution. In practice, however, it was not found that paid members were more energetic or more honest than those who were not paid. No doubt under the payment system there would be more candidates, but it was possible that they might not be better men. If payment of members were decided upon, it would be better for each constituency to pay its own members. Under any circumstances, the electors must find the money, and, if they paid it directly, they would have the power they could not otherwise exercise—of cutting off supplies if their representative failed to do his duty. For his own part, he would never be instrumental in bringing in a bill for the payment of members, but he would not oppose it. He was in favour of an extension of the system of local self-government, as a movement in the direction of decentralisation. The Government had introduced a rather cumbrous measure on this subject, which would have to be narrowly watched. If returned, he would do his best to get a suitable bill passed. A good deal had been said of late on the subject of irrigation, and, no doubt, a large amount of benefit would result from bringing water to arid country; but there was this difficulty in the matter—most of the land was now aggregated in large estates, and he feared that so great was the wealth and influence of owners of these large holdings, that engineers and surveyors would be found reporting that the water must go through these properties, which would thus be benefited at the cost of the general taxpayers. The same thing had been done in railway construction; as for example in the case of the Hay and Narrandera line, which, for the greater part of its length, traversed one or two large estates. He was in favour of money being borrowed to make light railways through sparsely populated districts, with a view to induce settlement, even if there was no prospect of an immediate return. If railways were not built roads must be constructed, and a well-made road maintained for 10 years would cost as much as a light railway. He should not, however, advocate going too deeply into debt for that purpose. He regarded the land question as the most important of all—in fact, as the only really great question with which the Australian colonies had to deal; and they had not dealt with it satisfactorily. Large estates had been built up in all the colonies. He held that not a single acre of land should ever have been sold, but every man requiring land should lease it from the Government. Concerning the present Land Act, he considered that the measure had some good points—notably in its recognition of the leasing principle in the western division—and if equitably administered, would, with certain amendments, work fairly well. He regretted, however, that the leasing system had not also been applied in the eastern and central divisions, as he could not see why the farmer should not be permitted to lease his land as well as the grazier. There had been to his own knowledge some unfairness in dividing the runs, and the administration of the law should be carefully watched. He did not agree with the attitude assumed by the late Government on the question of federation. They seemed more anxious to "rule the roast" than to take a broad and generous view of this question. Referring to the Soudan expedition the speaker said that he had condemned it at the time and still disapproved of it, but he did not think that the subject should be again brought forward, as quite enough had already been said about it. He believed that if the necessity arose all Australia would cheerfully help the mother country; but there was no necessity for their intervention in every petty squabble between certain foreign Powers, who were always ready, on the slightest pretext, to fly at each other's throats. Still it was a good thing that this wave of military enthusiasm should have gone over the country. He did not believe in the maintenance of a standing army; but he thought it well that all our young men should be trained to arms, as, though it was unlikely at present, a time might arrive when every man would be needed; and should that time ever come, there was every reason to believe that Australians, with their powerful physique and proficiency in athletic sports, would do credit to themselves and the race from which they sprang.

Mr. W. J. Lyne addressed the electors of Hume at Germanton last night, at the Criterion Hotel, and in spite of the inclemency of the weather, the room was crowded by a large gathering, fully representative of the town and district, and including most of the leading residents. The speaker referred to the leading political topics of the day, but dealt principally with a comparison of the Land Acts of 1861 and 1884. He also referred to federation, the fiscal policy, irrigation, and local government. The general disposition of the meeting appeared to be favourable to giving the Land Act a fair trial. The candidate met with a most enthusiastic reception, and received a unanimous vote of confidence at the close of the meeting.

Messrs. J. Day and J. Kirkpatrick have retired in favour of Mr. J. Hayes, a new candidate.

BOWRAVILLE, Saturday.

A well-attended meeting of the electors was held at Bowra to-day, at which a resolution in favour of the candidature of Mr. R. B. Smith was carried unanimously. A very large and strong committee was formed to secure his return.

PENRITH, Sunday.

Mr. T. R. Smith addressed a crowded meeting of electors last night at the Temperance Hall. He gave a lengthy account of his stewardship, and his opinions on other matters likely to be considered during the next session. A vote of confidence, which was moved by Alderman Besley, and seconded by Mr. Hodges, was carried unanimously.

Alderman Cross, the other candidate, held a meeting at Dickson's Hotel on the same evening. The attendance was small, and the speech was a very brief one. Mr. Dunkley occupied the chair, and no vote of confidence was taken.

PORT MACQUARIE, Saturday.

Mr. Jennings, the local candidate, addressed the electors of this district last nigh. He opposed the Land Act, and advocated survey before selection, and liberal inducements being given to immigrants to settle upon the lands. He was in favour of protecting native industries. The Education Act had his favour so far as it applied to secular education, but he would compel the teaching of theology in the Public school, as he considered without this our youths would often tend towards infidelity through incomplete training in the Public schools. The north coast railway, as well as all railways likely to yield revenue, had his support, but he placed the improvement of harbour bars before railway construction. He opposed centralisation in Sydney, and was in favour of establishing markets at Newcastle and other northern leading centres. He strongly advocated the deepening of harbours by dredging within the rivers to allow of the entrance of foreign vessels of large capacity. He promised to look after local wants if returned. A vote of confidence in the candidate was unanimously passed. Mr. Jennings also addressed the electors at the Upper River to-day.

WEST MAITLAND, Saturday.

Mr. Walter Edmunds, a candidate for the representation of West Maitland, addressed a crowded and enthusiastic meeting of electors in the School of Arts this evening. Mr. James Pritchard occupied the chair, and briefly introduced the candidate. Mr. Edmunds remarked that, it being now the duty of the electors of West Maitland to choose a suitable representative, he appeared before them as a candidate, and to let them see what kind of man he was. The present election, he said, was brought about unexpectedly and hurriedly, and at a time when the session had nearly run its length. He contended that they had been thrown unjustifiably into the throes of dissolution. It was unjustifiable in the manner in which it was done, when Parliament was dissolved without any adequate supply being passed, and he condemned the excessive pace at which the electors were called upon to choose their representatives. The late session was one of unparalleled recrimination amongst members, which he deprecated. Mr. Garvan's motion, he considered, was based upon a sound principle, and which could not be called recrimination. The motion was introduced without the insinuation of any charges on the part of Mr. Garvan, and he could not be held responsible for what others did. He desired to affirm a sound political opinion, that a man in the position of Mr. Wright should not be controller of a department where such vast interests were concerned. On the reconstruction of the Government, they found Mr. Wright no longer in charge of the Works Department, which was a recognition of the principle embodied in Mr. Garvan's motion. Mr. Farnell was removed from the Lands Department, which was also a recognition of the same principle. The only qualification of the new Minister for Works, Mr. Badgery, appeared to have been his opposition to the party by whom he was chosen. He (Mr. Edmunds) condemned the Land Act, which he thought would never work satisfactorily. An indiscriminate protective tariff was a pure fallacy, and free trade was the great goal at which the colony should aim. The railway policy of the Government he disagreed with, as they endeavoured to force trade from its legitimate channels in order to bring it to the metropolis. For instance, close to the Victorian border wool was carried at a price which did not pay the carriage so that the trade might be brought to Sydney, and the Government was not justified in spending thousands of pounds annually in this way to the benefit of the merchants of Sydney. In the same way the trade was endeavoured to be wrested from them by taking the railway from Mudgee to Coonamble and Walgett, instead of from Narrabri to Walgett. He applauded the action of the Government in sending troops to the Soudan to assist the mother country; but Parliament should have been called together sooner to sanction the expenditure, as it was the only power which could do so. He appealed to them for their support as one bred and born amongst them, as one whose character they had had before them for a long time, and to his special training and fitness to represent them, and to his assured them he would not prove a discredit to himself. In answer to questions he said he was in favour of a land tax, and of taxing absentee land owners. Taxing colonial products he considered very mischievous. He was entirely in favour of the present Education Act. He favoured local option, but would compensate hotel-keepers if they were compelled to close their houses. He would extend the local option vote to the electors, and believed in Sunday closing. He was in favour of payment of members as a principle, but which was not necessary now, as they could find plenty of good men to represent them without payment. He was in favour of assisted immigration. Alderman James proposed, and Mr. C. F. Solling seconded, "that Walter Edmund is a fit and proper person to represent the electors of West Maitland in the forthcoming Parliament." The resolution was carried unanimously.

A public meeting of the electors favourable to the candidature of Mr. R. A. Young for West Maitland was held at the Victoria Theatre this evening, when there was not a large attendance. Much indignation, however, was expressed at Mr. Young's announcement that he had decided to retire from the contest in favour of Mr. H. E. Cohen. That gentleman had decided not to seek re-election, but his friends induced him to change his mind, and he consented to contest the election. There was considerable excitement when the announcement spread through the town, and the rumour was discussed generally, but later on large posters announced that Mr. Cohen was in the field, and the contest will remain with him and Mr. Edmund, as it is regarded as almost certain that Mr. Kelton will retire in favour of the latter. Mr. Cohen's action is not favourably viewed. His re-election was looked upon as almost certain, but as he had announced his retirement many electors pledged themselves to support Mr. Edmund, and by the tone and feeling exhibited this evening there is every possibility of the latter being elected by a large majority.

WINDSOR, Saturday.

Mr. H. M'Quade addressed a meeting of the electors of Hawkesbury last evening, at Pitt Town, about 80 persons being present. Mr. John Pendergast occupied the chair. Considerable opposition was shown to the candidate, but at the conclusion of his address, the usual vote of confidence was declared to be carried. On the same night, Mr. Bowman addressed a large meeting of the electors at Riverstone, Mr. Joseph Craig being chairman. Some questions were answered satisfactorily, and a vote of confidence was carried by an overwhelming majority. Mr. M'Quade addresses the electors at Windsor to-night, and Mr. Bowman at Pitt Town. The statement which was made public that Mr. Benjamin Richards was a candidate is incorrect. He signed the requisition to Mr. Bowman.

AMUSEMENTS.

HERR KRETSCHMANN'S MATINEE MUSICALE.

There was a very large attendance at the University on Saturday afternoon when Herr Kretschmann gave a concert. Admission was by invitation, and very little space in the Great Hall was unoccupied. The programme commenced with the first movement of a quartet by a Josef Rheinberger (B. 1839) one of the best known works of this prolific and accomplished composer. The pianoforte was taken by a lady amateur, presumedly one of Herr Kretschmann's pupils; the strings were played by Herr Kretschmann, M. Caron, and Herr Patek. The quartet was divided, the first movement, Allegro, being given at the opening, and in the middle the Menuetto and Allegro finale; omitting the Adagio, which has an important part for the cello, with a beautiful accompaniment by the strings without the piano. The finale is in the Rondo form, and has a lively piquant melody. The quartet is a beautiful composition, difficult for the players, and on Saturday the stringed instruments were partly overpowered by the pianoforte; it was, however, very interesting to musical people, and will be even more welcome on a second hearing. Master Frank Smith, the talented pupil of Herr Kretschmann, played Spohr's eighth concerto "Nello stilo drammatico," one of the most elevated in idea and eminent in the fitness of every detail for the solo part of all the works of this great composer. The player has good quality of tone and executive skill, and has all the makings of a fine violinist. At present there is a want of polish and culture in the style which is very noticeable in a work of this character; in the Chopin Nocturne (No. 5) the rendering was superior. The boy shows much talent, and does great credit to his teacher; his defects are precisely those which belong to his age and circumstances. Herr Patek played the charming solo "Melancolie" (Corinne) with great expression and skill. Mr. Knight Aston was the vocalist; he sang "Estudiantina," a student's merry song, and Braham's "Death of Nelson," both in a spirited and effective manner, save that the excessive force with which he gives utterance to the high notes, in spite of the immense applause the efforts bring, is not in good style, and must have a dangerous effect upon his voice. In response to a very pronounced encore, he gave a song by Offenbach. Master Smith was recalled after each solo, and the efforts of the quartet players were deservedly applauded. Mr. Edward Massey acted efficiently as accompanist, and a very enjoyable concert terminated with the Serenade of Haydn, played by the string quartet in the same musicianly style which marked the interpretation of the Rheinberger Quartet; they were greatly applauded, and the musical public certainly owe much to Herr Kretschmann for his disinterested efforts to provide so attractive an entertainment.

THE SYDNEY MISSION CONCERT.

For some weeks Miss Pedley, with a number of lady and gentleman amateurs, has been busy preparing for a concert in aid of the funds of the Sydney City Mission. The concert is to take place on Wednesday evening next, at the Protestant Hall. The Most Rev. the Primate and Mrs. Barry and a number of influential ladies and gentlemen have given their patronage to this concert, which has been arranged with the hope of reducing the heavy debt which cramps the mission in its useful work. The workers in this cause deserve the hearty support of the public, for by their aid, according to the society's report, 227 individuals have been enrolled as members of some Christian Church, and the mission journals record that far from the good work ending with this "spiritual renovation is always followed by temporal and social improvement. When the intemperate not only become sober, but truly converted men, the speedy transformation of their homes resembles that of a thorny wilderness turned into a pleasant garden. Instead of domestic quarrels you see domestic harmony; instead of children shoeless and in rags, they are now neatly clothed; instead of an old straw mattress on the floor, a new bedstead, with sheets and blankets, are seen; instead of a heavy debt, money in the Savings Bank." More than a hundred pounds were distributed last year by the city missionaries to relieve urgent cases of destitution and suffering; much more is needed, and it is hoped that this appeal will not be disregarded by those who are scarcely aware of the need for the help which the quiet workers in this cause give to the sufferers who are brought under their notice. Mrs. Bessie Drinan, Mr. W. A. Maclean, Mr. D. Fletcher, Mr. Fitzgerald, and the Cecilia Choir, assisted by other ladies, making a total of 50 voices, will be the performers. The programme, irrespective of the object of the concert, is sufficiently attractive to merit hearty support.

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Federal Minstrels this evening will resume their entertainment on the same lines which more than a year ago brought them into such good repute with the public. An attractive programme is announced.

The Lynch Family Bellringers' concert at the Oddfellows' Hall, Manly, is postponed until to-morrow evening, in consequence of Mr. Dibbs (Premier) addressing the electors there this evening.

The new St. Bernard Railway, which it is said is likely to be commenced shortly, will, when finished, be a dangerous competitor for the through traffic with the already existing route of St. Gothard, as the tunnel under the Alps will be much shorter.

What Shall I Drink?—The Lancet says: "We have tested the Montserrat Lime-Fruit Juice and found it sound and free from adulteration. It is a far more wholesome drink than any other form of alcohol." Annual importation over 100,000 gallons, sold by all storekeepers, Sydney. Elliott Brothers.—[Advt.]

NOTES EXPLANATORY OF MAP.

In the list of stations the column headed W.T. gives the state of the weather at 9 a.m., b standing for blue sky; c, detached clouds; d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, gloomy; h, hazy; m, misty; n, frosty; o, overcast; p, passing showers; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u, threatening. The next column Mx gives the maximum temperature for previous 24 hours. M'n the corresponding minimum temperature; r'n, the rain for the previous 24 hours. The symbols used in the map are explained on the margin. At each coast station the wind symbol is placed like a vane pointing to the direction from which the wind is coming. A clear circle with it means fine weather; a circle with bar, cloudy weather; and a black spot, raining. Next to this symbol are placed figures denoting the number of miles the wind is moving per hour; next, a symbol showing the state of the sea; and, lastly, figures denoting the shade temperature at 9 a.m. The barometer curve shows the state of barometers round the coast from Perth to Cooktown:—Pt, Perth; Ay, Albany; Ea, Eucla; CB, Cape Borda; A, Adelaide; Re, Robe; P, Portland; M, Melbourne; WP, Wilson's Promontory; Go, Gabo; E, Eden; Ma, Moruya; CG Jervis Bay; Wg, Wollongong; S, Sydney; N, Newcastle; PM, Port Macquarie; C, Clarence River; B, Brisbane; R, Rockhampton; Ct, Cooktown. Inland the state of barometer is given in figures at Albury, Deniliquin, Wentworth, Menindie, Bourke, and Alice Springs. The barometer curve enables one at a glance to trace the depressions, beginning with Western Australia, and passing along eastwards; northerly winds preceding them, and southerly following.

South Australia.—Generally cloudy, and raining inland to Hergott; winds N.W. to S.W.; heaviest rain near George Town, 0·70 to 0.08. Telegrams too late for map.

Victoria.—Generally cloudy, with fresh northerly winds; slight sea and falling barometers on coast; showery at Portland; rather rough sea at Cape Otway; squally at Wilson's Promontory, with threatening appearance in N.W.; cloudy inland at Omeo. Rainfall: Portland, 0·25.

Tasmania.—Steady rain falling on N. coast, with fresh N.E. wind. Rainfall: Low Heads, 0·12.

New Zealand.—Russell, barometer 30·20; Wellington, barometer, 30·20; Bluff, barometer 30·10. Calm and fine generally.

New South Wales.—Generally fine, with scattered clouds; dull in S. and S.W., with rain falling at Balranald and Wentworth. See map above for details. Smooth sea, falling barometers, and light northerly winds, tending to E. on coast. Calm inland.

Queensland.—Generally fine and clear, with S.E. winds and smooth sea. Rainfall, Cooktown 0·02.

3 P.M. OBSERVATIONS.

ELECTORAL DUTY.

ADDRESS BY THE PRIMATE.

On Sunday night Bishop Barry addressed the congregation of St. Andrew's Cathedral on electoral duty, taking for his text St. John viii. 32, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Referring more especially to the approaching elections,

Dr. Barry said: I ask you at what is one of the recurring political crises, when you are preparing in the week to discharge what ought to be felt as one of the most sacred responsibilities, to listen with some concentration of thought to this teaching of our Lord and Master. Other voices are filling the air around us—some to excite, some to warn, many to make for strife, a few only for peace. At such a time it seems to be well that on the Lord's Day of sacred rest we should come aside out of the turmoil, and ask here, in the silence and solemnity of the church, whether there is any message for us as citizens in the word of God? Why is knowledge of the truth the condition of real freedom? Consider this, and that all truths whatever are and must be simply expressions of the will, and so ultimately of the nature of God. On all of us, my brethren, in such a community as this, lies some responsibility for the right guidance and preservation of its freedom, and that responsibility is brought home to us with special force and clearness at this time, when we are to choose what will be for good or for evil the ruling power over us, making and enforcing our laws for some not inconsiderable time to come. From that responsibility it would be a sin to shrink. The abstention—fastidious or cowardly—which stands aloof from all public life because of the abuse and calumny, the trickeries and littlenesses which disgrace it, is a kind of negative treason—a treason of apathy—sure to bring speedy disgrace and punishment. The recklessness which plunges into the struggle for the mere delight in fighting and victory for the sake of personal vanity or personal self-seeking, flinging scurrilous and slanderous invective right and left, and degrading by levity and passion the enormous responsibility of power—this is a more positive treason, the treason of a base and culpable folly. The spirit of dishonest and unrighteous corruption, playing deliberately for our own miserable purposes upon the greed and the folly, the bad passions and petty class feelings of human kind, sacrificing first the nation to party and then even party to selfish ability. This is the yet deadlier treason of base, deliberate wickedness. From triumphs such as these in the days now coming may God deliver us. Against them other voices may be heard. Against these the warnings of an enlightened expediency, and much more of a thoughtful patriotism, may well rise, but, above all, like the deep-toned church bell over the din of our crowded streets, the solemn voice of our Lord Jesus Christ utters its continual warning, calling on all who love the truth, that truth, and truth alone, shall save our people from manifold slavery under the noble garb of freedom. My brethren, it must be plain to every man who thinks that what is needed here now in the political sphere, if we are to grow to any true greatness, is simply wise, firm, and righteous government, caring not for individual parties, or classes, but for the country as a whole. For individual freedom, for equality before the Lord, for opportunity to all of livelihood and comfort, there is now no fear. Thanks to the struggles of centuries, in England, these precious things are ours beyond all possibility of loss unless we wilfully fling them away. But for guiding and hallowing that freedom by the knowledge of supreme truth we need most of all, what no merely political action can give us—a sound, thoughtful, righteous, unselfish, reverent tone of public opinion and feeling among us; but we do need also that which is its outward expression, and for which our electoral power ought to be used. We do need such Government as can be rightly called good. I think it is truer now than when it was spoken as an unpopular utterance more than 30 years ago, that representative institutions are on their trial. It is so in the great mother of Parliaments in the old country. It is so in the lesser daughter Parliaments which have sprung up in her self-governing colonies. I say these institutions are on their trial—whether indeed they can give us this wise and righteous government—whether indeed they can prove themselves compatible with progress in good legislation, and with stability in government at all. The victorious emergence from that trial, on which more than aught else the welfare of our future civilisation depends, must be wrought out in Parliaments by the self-restraint of freedom in them, through the knowledge, intellectual, moral, and spiritual, of the supreme, eternal, irreversible laws of truth. Let freedom become license by selfish struggle for personal reputation and self-interest, by factiousness, by local narrowness, by class jealousy, by forgetfulness of the moral restraints of truth, courtesy, respect for authority, and then, in some way or another, the supreme law which has been ignored will be avenged, and the institutions which have been our glory will become our perplexity and our shame. Before us now lies the duty of doing whatever we may, in the full measure of our opportunity, to send to our coming Legislature men who will strive to realise something, at least, of the true ideal. They must be men of high and untainted character, for it is vain to suppose that political nobleness can be compatible with personal dishonesty, profligacy, or self-indulgence. They must be men of such a measure of education and ability of various kinds as may fit them to handle the great responsibilities of power. They must be men also who will honestly try to do their duty to the welfare of the community as a whole, and scorn to sacrifice it to the petty interests of their own class and constituency. They must be men of some instinct of statesmanship in the conception of the part which our colony has to discharge in the brotherhood of the empire, in the mission of the English-speaking race, for the welfare of all mankind. They must be men who will be the representatives of what is good, and not of what is bad in us; not mere reflections of our miserable littleness and factiousness, but men who can understand that there are questions altogether beyond the sphere of section or party, which it is sin to baffle or delay. These are the men whom we ought to send to Parliament; and while, of course, on great questions of policy we must know whether they can represent what we believe to be wise and just, yet on all lesser matters we should send them there unfettered by petty obligations and promises given simply to secure votes, that they may deal with the questions set before them honestly and freely, in the name of their country. Who can work for good if one of his hands is tied? Who can do honest service if he leaves his conscience in the keeping of others? Can we find such men? Neither here nor elsewhere can we hope to find them in ideal perfection; but if we cannot find them up to a fair measure of capability, then woe, indeed, to us; and woe also to the great cause of free government and free civilisation. God grant to us who elect, and to those whom we send to power, so to know these forms of the supreme truth, that they may bring us the true freedom and the yet higher things for which such freedom is but the means. Consider how great a task lies before this community, and in a measure therefore before the Parliament which represents it, if it is to advance to the greatness of which men talk confidently, and so far rightly that the capacity of it seems undoubtedly given by the providence of God. There lies before us the development of those material resources which God has given us, by opening up the real treasures of our country to human use and the commerce of the world, by solving the great question of all questions for the material prosperity of the colony in the supply, service, and diffusion of that water which we are told we may secure, and yet the want of which year after year brings suffering, misery, and ruin; by dealing with the laws of public health, especially in our great cities, by some bold and comprehensive measure, the delay of which for a single year, as is well understood, means the needless and therefore guilty sacrifice of hundreds of lives. These things alone are surely enough to tax the wisdom and boldness and unselfishness of our whole community and of its rulers.

COMMERCIAL.

PRODUCE MARKET.—Saturday.

On the wharfs to-day a small supply of produce was received, comprising chiefly consignments from the Northern rivers, but stocks are expected to be supplemented on Monday. Business was quiet, and with the exception of potatoes, which ruled firmer, the other lines show no material alteration. Operations were of a limited scale, being chiefly confined to potatoes, maize, onions, and dairy produce. The following are the wholesale quotations:—

Maize.—Market fairly stocked, and stocks are expected to be augmented on Monday. Export buyers are not operating so freely as of late. Quotations, 3s 9d to 3s 10d per bushel.

Oats.—Supplies sufficient for the requirements. The demand is chiefly for prime descriptions of feed at 2s 7d per bushel; other qualities from 2s 3d. Nothing doing in seed, and prices are nominal. Messrs. Kaye and Carter, of Christchurch, New Zealand, report, September 29:—Oats are firmly held, and the absence of much prime has enhanced values of discoloured and long sorts, which are worth 1s 10d to 1s 11d; good Danish, 2s; and bright Canadians, 2s 1d.

Barley.—Market inactive, and nominal value of Cape is 3s to 3s to 3s 3d per bushel.

Bran.—Ample stocks selling at 1s 1½d to 1s per bushel. In Christchurch, New Zealand, bran scarce at 92s 6d to 98s.

Pollard.—Moving off slowly at 1s per bushel.

Hay.—Larger arrivals than yesterday forward from the Hunter River this morning. Wharfs amply supplied. Trade was quiet. Prime lucerne, to £4 per ton; other qualities, from £2 5s to £3 15s.

Chaff.—Stocks are moderate, and further additions are expected on Monday. Victorian, £4 10s to £5 per ton.

Onions.—Market fairly supplied, and stocks expected to be augmented on Monday. Selling steadily at £5 to £6 10s per ton.

Potatoes.—No fresh arrivals, but further supplies are expected to be forward on Monday. Stocks being in one or two hands holders are asking higher rates. Circular Head, £4 15s to £5 per ton; New Zealand, £4. Messrs. Kaye and Carter, of Christchurch, New Zealand, report, September 29:—"Potatoes decidedly quieter, holders and growers anxiously watching the effects of the late heavy shipments to Sydney, and refusing to accept lower rates meanwhile."

Butter.—Market unaltered. Illawarra, in keg, at 1s 3d per lb.; roll, 1s 6d; intercolonial packed, at to 1s. Kaye and Carter, of Christchurch, New Zealand, report, September 29:—"Butter—The new will commence delivery in small quantities about a fortnight hence."

Cheese.—Light stock, and fair inquiry ruling for colonial at to 8½d per lb.; New Zealand, to 8d.

H. M. S. Miranda, from Thursday Island via Cooktown and Townsville, entered the Heads at 1.30 p.m. yesterday, and brought up in Farm Cove at about 3. The Admiral's flag, which had been flying at the mizen, was then hauled down, and hoisted on the Nelson, to which vessel Admiral Tryon was conveyed soon afterwards in his launch. The Miranda left Sydney on the 2nd ultimo and proceeded to Brisbane, where she arrived on the 7th, having had an uneventful passage up. The Nelson and Swinger were there. On the 18th the Admiral transferred his flag to the Miranda, which then got under way and proceeded to sea. Townsville was reached on the 21st, and left again on the following day, and two days later the Miranda anchored in Cooktown, finding there H.M.S. Raven and the Harrier. A departure thence was taken next day, and Thursday Island was reached on the 27th. Three days were spent here usefully and pleasantly, the pleasure being largely contributed to by the attentions of the Hon. J. Douglas, the Government resident of Thursday Island, and then the Miranda turned her head southwards again. Two of the smaller islands were touched at, to allow of the officers having some shooting, with satisfactory results, and Cooktown was reached on the 2nd instant. A departure was taken the same evening for Townsville, and the Miranda arrived there on the 5th. Coaled ship, and left again same day, and arrived as stated, having had fine weather throughout the passage. The Miranda is now commanded by Captain R. H. Paul, Captain Acland having received promotion and gone home. The Miranda is under sailing orders for this week, and her destination will most likely be Melbourne and Hobart.

The fine iron ship Cambrian Prince, which is no stranger to this port, arrived on Saturday from Puget Sound with a full cargo of lumber consigned to Messrs. Lorimer, Rome, and Company. Captain Davies has been succeeded in the command by Captain A. Evans, who reports of the voyage that the ship left Tacoma on August 1, and had fine weather throughout the voyage; N.W. and northerly winds prevailed till the N.E. trades were found in 32° N., whence light to moderate breezes were had to 12° N. Southerly and S.E. winds followed to 5. N., and then the S.E. trades were picked up. The Equator was crossed on September 1 in 155° W., and the S.E. trades lasted to 19° S., whence the wind was unsteady and variable to 30° S. After that light N.E. winds prevailed till arrival. The Cambrian Prince was towed in by the Irresistible and anchored below Garden Island. She is to be berthed at Dibbs' wharf to-day.

The American three-masted schooner John Worster left Tacoma on the same day and at the same hour as the Cambrian Prince, and was in company with the latter for nine days, being parted with on August 10 in 50° N. She is bound to Melbourne.

The A. S. N. Co.'s steamer Cintra arrived last night from Brisbane, after another remarkably smart passage of 33½ hours, with a large number of passengers and a general cargo. She left Brisbane at 10 a.m. on the 10th instant, rounded Cape Moreton at 2.30 p.m., and arrived at the company's wharf, Sydney, at 10.15 p.m. on the 11th. She experienced light northerly breezes to Seal Rocks, and fresh southerly breezes and rain thence to port.

The American barque Lottie Moore, which was last here about two years ago, dropped anchor in the upper part of Neutral Bay yesterday afternoon, having come from New York with a cargo of kerosene, other oil, timber, and miscellaneous merchandise. Captain C. W. Battie is again in command, and reports a not very eventful voyage. Sailing on June 23, the barque had moderate and fine weather till crossing the Equator on July 31, in 21·43 W., and S.E. trades thence to 18° S. The usual run of weather followed to the Cape, the meridian of which was crossed on August 29 in 45° S. The vessel called off the Island of Tristan de Acunha, and obtained a supply of fresh provisions, including meat, potatoes, milk, geese, fresh fish, &c., the quality of which Captain Battie speaks in the highest terms. All the people were well on the island. The Lottie Moore made her easting between the parallels of 45° and 47° S., and had moderate to strong westerly winds during the greater part of the time. Two heavy gales were encountered on September 12 and 14, the first lasting 12 hours and the second six hours, in both of which the vessel was hove; but she was not damaged, although plenty of water found its way on board. Bass' Straits were cleared on the 1st instant, and a nice run was made from there to Cape Howe, but after that the barque had to thrash her way to port against head winds and a southerly current. The Lottie Moore was towed in by the Irresistible.

The barque Martha, which arrived on Saturday evening, and dropped anchor in Neutral Bay, is from Puget Sound, laden with timber, and is consigned to Mr. J. C. Ellis. She sailed on August 7, and, like the Cambrian Prince, had a fine weather passage. The N.E. trades were only so in name, being very indifferent throughout. The Equator was crossed on September 9, in 158·41 W., and very light S.E. trades were had down to 8° S., and light variable winds thence to port. Lord Howe Island was passed on the 8th instant.

The E. and A. Company's steamship Tannadice, from Hongkong and Foochow via ports, with mails, passengers, and cargo, entered the Heads at a quarter past 6 yesterday morning, and after being inspected by the port health officer at Watson's Bay, proceeded to the quarantine station, Spring Cove, for fumigation and disinfection. This was completed by about half-past 3, when the steamer hove up anchor again and came up to a berth at the company's jetty, Smith's wharf. The Tannadice has been brought into port by Captain J. W. B. Darke, who took charge at Townsville, and who has been appointed to the permanent command of the ship. Under the command of Captain Green, the Tannadice achieved a reputation second to that of no vessel in the trade, and his promotion to the company's new steamship Guthrie will be hailed with pleasure by all who have had the good fortune to travel with him. Captain Darke brings to bear in the performance of his duties in the Tannadice a long and varied experience in first-class ships, and a reputation for courtesy to passengers and shippers, both on this line and on others, which should go far towards keeping up the good name of the Tannadice. The Tannadice left Foochow with a full cargo of tea and Chinese goods, under the command of Captain S. G. Green, at 2 p.m. on the 17th September, and arrived at Port Darwin at 11 a.m. on the 27th. After discharging cargo, she proceeded at 1 p.m. on the 28th, and reached Thursday Island at 1.15 p.m. on the 1st instant. She left again at 5 p.m., and anchored at Cooktown at 11 a.m. on the 3rd, leaving Cooktown at 2.30 p.m. same day; Townsville was reached at 2.45 p.m. on the 4th. Here a stay was made to await the arrival of the Company's s.s. Guthrie, from Sydney, which vessel anchored in Cleveland Bay at 10 p.m. on the 5th. Captain Green and Captain Darke exchanged commands at this port, the former returning to China in the Guthrie, while Captain Darke, as before stated, brought the Tannadice to this port. Leaving Cleveland Bay at 1 p.m. on the 6th, the Tannadice anchored at Brisbane bar at 8 a.m. on the 9th; left at 5 p.m., rounded Cape Moreton at 8 p.m., passed Smoky Cape at 2 p.m. 10th, Seal Rocks at 9.15 p.m., and arrived as above. Experienced moderate breezes and fine weather to Basilan Straits; thence to Port Darwin variable winds, with very hazy weather, followed by fresh S.E. breezes and fine weather to Cape Moreton; from Cape Moreton to Port Stephens fresh N. winds and fine weather, but dull overcast latter part; from thence to port light W. winds and cloudy weather; smooth sea.

The steamer Archer, from Cooktown, via intermediate ports and Brisbane, left the latter port at 8 p.m. on the 9th instant, and arrived alongside the company's wharf at 7.20 p.m. on the 11th instant. She had strong N.E. winds from Brisbane to Seal Rocks, and variable winds with rain thence to port.

The schooner Lookout, the arrival of which was reported in Saturday's issue, was berthed at the Patent Slip wharf on Saturday morning. The Lookout sailed on the 24th ultimo from Kaipara, with a full cargo of timber, and had fresh to strong northerly and N.E. winds for the first four days, at the end of which time she was in 162° E. and 37° S., and very light westerly winds thence till the 29th ultimo. A fresh N.W. breeze sprang up on the following day, with squally threatening weather. At 4 a.m. on the 1st ult. sail was reduced, the weather having a very threatening appearance, and soon afterwards a fierce squall struck the ship, and afterwards settled into a hard S.W. gale. At 6 a.m., the vessel was hove to, under the mainsail. A high broken sea accompanied the storm, and the Lookout shipped great quantities of water, which carried away a considerable portion of the top-gallant rail and bulwarks. The aspect of affairs was so bad that Captain Harwood determined to try the use of oil on the waves, and he accordingly placed an oil-bag over the starboard bow, the result being, as he states, almost marvellous. Previous to trying the experiment the waves were breaking over the vessel fore and aft, and the cabin was half full of water, but afterwards, not a drop of water came on board, although the storm continued for 24 hours. Several other gales were encountered, but no damage was done.

The schooner Aurora, which also arrived on Friday night, and the arrival of which has already been reported, had, like the Lookout, some heavy weather on the passage across from Kaipara, but was not damaged. She sailed on the 24th ult., the same day as the Lookout left. She is to be towed above Pyrmont Bridge to-day.

The barque Empreza, owned in Adelaide, arrived yesterday afternoon from Mauritius with a full cargo of sugar-mats, and anchored below Garden Island. She sailed on the 2nd ultimo, and had fine weather almost throughout the passage. The easting was made on the parallel of 39° S., and with the exception of a fresh gale after passing St. Paul's which did no damage, the wind was moderate from the westward till Bass's Straits were cleared on the 30th day out. Thence to port nothing but northerly winds, with a strong southerly current, prevailed. The Empreza was towed in by the Irresistible to an anchorage below Garden Island.

The steamer Tiverton, from London, is berthed at Moore's Wharf.

The American ship L. J. Morse and a barque passed the Heads at 3.40 p.m. yesterday, bound north.

The barque Afton, from Brisbane bound to Colombo, was spoken yesterday forenoon by Captain Williams, of the steam tug Mystery, 20 miles to the eastward of the Heads, all well.

The three-masted schooner Annie Bow, from Timaru with a cargo of produce, entered the Heads at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and was towed by the Mystery to an anchorage in Pyrmont Bight. Captain Stephens reports having encountered some very heavy weather during the passage, which was begun at 4 p.m. on the 25th ultimo. On the 28th there was a strong gale from N.W., with most terrific squalls; and it continued during the following day, accompanied by a high cross-sea, in which the vessel laboured very heavily and took on board large quantities of water. A succession of gales followed till October 4, attended with mountainous seas, and several sails were split and lost and the cabin was filled with water. On the 2nd October a heavy squall struck the vessel and threw her on her beam ends, in which position she lay for more than an hour. After the 4th, light winds and calms were met with till arrival.

The three-masted schooner Fairlie took her departure for the Solomon Islands on Saturday evening.

The Sydney Morning Herald.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1885.

This morning we announce another change in the Ministerial programme. On Saturday we reported the resignation of Mr. Farnell, and now we hear that, instead of taking the Colonial Treasurership, Sir Patrick Jennings is to be Colonial Secretary. We are not told why the arrangement which had been duly published, and which was supposed to be complete, was not adhered to. We know that Sir Patrick Jennings was not in town when the Ministry was formed, and it is possible that, in his anxiety to get his team together, the Premier took too much for granted. Whatever may have induced the Government to alter their arrangements, the alteration is not in itself a matter of much consequence to the public. There is no particular reason why Sir Patrick should be the Colonial Treasurer rather than Colonial Secretary. If he is equal to the one position he is certainly equal to the other. Sir Patrick's own preference, it must be admitted, was a most natural one. The status of the Colonial Secretary is a higher one than that of the Treasurer, and it is possible that the fact weighed with the new Minister. But on more grounds than one a man of Sir Patrick Jennings' tastes and temperament would prefer the office to which he is now appointed to the one that was at first assigned to him. Before very long some rather critical questions may have to be dealt with, and some disagreeable work done in the Treasury. And not only would any new-comer shrink from such a task; he would point out that the Minister who has had the Treasury in the past, and who is therefore familiar with its affairs, is the one who should have it in the future. If this was Sir Patrick's view, the public will not say that it was an unreasonable one. We can conceive of objections to the new arrangement, but we cannot conceive of any that deserve very serious consideration. But while there is no good ground for objecting to the allotment which is now agreed upon, it is to be regretted that it was not made at the start. This chopping and changing, although it may not materially affect the strength of the Government, will affect its credit. It may not lessen its fitness for useful service, but it will bring grist to the Opposition mill. It must also be admitted that two such changes as we have had during the last two or three days suggest the possibility of a third. The Government that is to stand must be united, and the unity of a Ministry that undergoes important modifications during the first two or three days of its existence is not likely to prove impressive.

Nor will it be said that the Government which has so clearly blundered in the matter of its secret arrangements has so far been materially strengthened by its public deliverances. The only speech that we have yet had from the new Minister for Works was certainly a feeble attempt, and if the address of the Premier at St. Leonards on Friday night was not a weak one, it cannot be said to have been in all respects a strong one. As a Premier, Mr. Dibbs is young, and so much a stranger might have inferred from his speech. The new Premier is always vigorous, and generally straightforward, but he lacks the coolness and the tact that are generally possessed by successful Premiers. The temptation to turn upon the critics who had shown as little respect for themselves as they had shown for their opponents, was no doubt a strong one. The Premier's denunciation of much of the opposition by which he and his colleagues have been assailed was not too severe. But if the denunciation answered any useful purpose at all, there was altogether too much of it. It is not necessary for a Premier to answer every fool according to his folly. Instead of replying to opponents his concern should be to furnish matter for replies. English Premiers of the first rank do not fail to meet the arguments of their critics, but they seldom or never take notice of personalities. Unless in exceptional circumstances these are best answered by silence. As a rule the personal characters of honest Ministers may be left to take care of themselves.

In regard to one or two particulars, the Premier put himself to some trouble to belabour a corpse. The sending of the Contingent has been a legitimate matter for pride, but at this stage it is a matter that may be allowed to drop. By this time we may be fairly said to have had enough of it. Even the members of the Opposition who abhor the Contingent are getting to be of this opinion, and if the Opposition think so there is no reason why Ministers should think otherwise. Besides, some of the leading members of the Opposition have looked upon the sending of the Contingent as a wise thing, and those who hold it to have been an unwise one may safely be left to their own devices. It is safe to say that if the Government are discredited by the constituencies, it will not be because they despatched the Contingent. The St. Leonards electors who wanted the Premier to come to the point on Friday were no doubt impatient, and they were evidently not friendly, but they were not unreasonable. Mr. Dibbs did what many unpractised public speakers do; he left his good wine to the last, and when he came to it he discovered that his guests had already had more than enough. Where he left off on Friday he should have started. Of our financial position he told his hearers next to nothing, and that, as well as being a subject of special interest just now, is the one subject Mr. Dibbs has made his own. Then, there is the Land Act. Taken all round, this is not a subject that specially concerns the Treasurer; but there is a side of it which affects him, and the exact bearing of our new land legislation on our finances is a matter of special interest at present. These is, also, the Federal Council affair. In reply to a question, Mr. Dibbs signified his disapproval of the Enabling Act; but, in a speech of the Premier at least, a subject over which there has been so much Ministerial controversy ought to have had a more prominent place. Upon the whole, we are afraid that the new Government has more to fear from itself than from its enemies. It is not a strong Government, and Ministers themselves cannot expect that it will prove a lasting one. We presume that after what has happened nobody will be greatly surprised if the party that achieved so substantial a victory three years ago should now suffer an equally substantial defeat.

But though such an event is possible, it is not one to be anticipated with lively satisfaction. If the Government have little to offer the country, the Opposition have less. So far the Opposition leaders not only offer nothing, they maintain that nothing is required. What Sir Henry Parkes (who opposes Mr. Dibbs at St. Leonards) demands is, in effect, that the country shall dismiss the present Ministers for what has been done in the past, and then give him and his friends carte blanche for the future. For the purposes of his political campaign, Sir Henry appears to think that abuse is to be preferred to argument. "When Mr. Dibbs tried to set himself up as a public castigator," he told the electors of St. Leonards on Saturday, "he simply sank to the level of a blackguard." And referring to Mr. Wright, Sir Henry said that "he never expected to live to see the character of Bill Sykes reproduced in a Cabinet Minister in New South Wales." Respecting which we may say if Mr. Dibbs sinks as low when he sets himself up as a public castigator, to what does a man who uses language of this kind sink? Sir John Robertson wants the repeal of the Land Act. The claim that the Act should have a fair trial, according to Sir John, is idiotic; and, if that be so, the only sensible course must be to abolish the new Act at once, and, so far as the contracts which have been made will allow, to return to the old ones. It may be presumed that if Sir John Robertson returns to power, that is what he will seek to accomplish. It is at least the course to which his address to the electors of Mudgee commits him, and the address cannot be said to commit the leader of the Opposition to anything else. But are the Opposition members prepared for that course; and if they are, is the country prepared for it? We question whether either is prepared for it, and if not, the Opposition may be said to be a party who have plenty to say against the programme of their opponents, but who have no programme of their own.

What are the essential qualifications for Parliamentary service? The question is of present importance, for shortly every elector in the colony will be called upon for a practical answer. What are the qualifications a candidate must possess? What are those which he should possess? And what others are there which it is desirable that he should display if he aspires to the higher service of leadership? The first of these are the most important, the essentials about which there must be satisfaction—the solid stones in the bases of the life that sets itself forward for the approval of the people. And these are very simple: they are honour and honesty, and a sound judgment. It is the duty of every elector to satisfy himself, first, that the candidate of his choice is an honourable man, not of necessity wearing from his birth the white flower of blameless life, but honourable in his broad public record, free of any proven guilt, free also of the clinging suspicion of meanness and baseness, which, if falsely attached, should by a very simple effort be shaken away. The candidate should first be clear to bear the honour he courts, and next capable. To judge of capacity is a far more intricate and difficult task than to pronounce upon honour and honesty. These first essentials stand out in a man and in his career, while capacity is often simulated or taken on trust, or accepted as being latent and to be developed by opportunity. It ought not tobe so; the elector should run no risk of being deceived in the man he chooses as a representative; he ought to take nothing on trust, he ought not to send any man into Parliament to develop qualities whose germs he is assumed to possess. He should require proof, but how is he to obtain proof? The candidate comes to him with a glib tongue and unlimited promises. It is difficult to understand that they are worth nothing, or less than nothing; that the former, unless well instructed, is a vexatious hindrance to business in Parliament, and should be taken as a fatal disqualification to the candidate seeking election. Yet, as experience teaches, such is simple truth—talk in Parliament is often not the medium of work, but of obstruction. The talker is too frequently the nuisance—the man who baulks all progress, who is not in any sense to be mistaken for the leader to whom power of speech is a necessity. Speech from the candidate should only be regarded by the electors as matter whereon to found judgment, as the vehicle of qualification—not the qualification itself. The speech should convey and express the speaker's judgment upon all matters of importance, and according to that judgment he should be chosen or rejected. According to his judgment,—that should be the broad ground of decision to which everything else should be subservient.

The gift of speech put aside as in itself no qualification, other matters may be briefly considered—the municipal qualification, the municipal record, the parochial industry and usefulness, the faithfulness in a few petty details which is set up as sufficient reason for a share in the control of national matters. Is it a sound or an adequate reason? It is but necessary to consider the nature of municipal duties to find an answer. The successful alderman or mayor must be watchful, industrious, busy, and liberal; the satisfactory member of Parliament also; but while the duties of the municipal councillor end with these, those of the senator do but begin. Honourable he must be from the foundation, watchful and industrious always, busy in acquiring understanding of the matters upon which he must judge, and liberal in interpretation of all things; but, further, he must be instructed and capable of judgment upon large matters. He is not fit to take a place in Parliament unless he has a knowledge of the colony's laws and needs; he must give no blind vote; he must follow no blind leading; he must display a familiarity, not with the provisions only, but the working of the Land Act; he must know the truth about all important laws of the land: he must have given some intelligent study to the vast question of finance, and have some intelligent forecast of the large requirements of the future. All these are required to enable him to perform the one great function of an ordinary member of Parliament—the giving of an intelligent vote. That is the purpose for which he is elected—a purpose quite above and apart from the ordinary municipal duties. And yet municipal duties are not to be despised as the beginning of preparation; there are other ways against which far heavier objections lie. There is the graduation in schools of prejudice, where no good, broad, useful man was ever prepared; and these, most unfortunately for the colony and its politics, are numerous as strong. These, set up men, possessed of a single fad, and armed with a single purpose, prepared chiefly for obstruction and bargaining, necessarily devoid of all broad patriotism, because sworn to advance some single point at the cost of the whole country's business. It is the duty of every elector to shun these men as inimical to the broadest and best interests of the colony. It matters not what they are called—nominees of sacred or of secular guilds, they are each and all fettered from honest work by pledges already given. Electors choosing them make confession that the particular fad they desire to advance is of higher importance than the broad welfare of the colony; that it is rather essential to be a good representative of some particular organisation than a good Australian, free citizen of the State. The really competent man mars his qualification by binding himself to any institution, and the incompetent who puts on the patronage of such an institution as a qualification, adds proof to proof of utter unfitness.

For if electors will but look at these matters with open eyes they must see how they stultify themselves by accepting such nominees or pledge-bearers; how they make confession that the one small point is of more importance than the whole breadth of national progress; how, in fact, they exchange their natural human birthright, their full and free citizenship, for such a mess of pottage as a free man should spurn as a gift. Doubtless there have been times—unquestionably there are in this colony memories of times when it was necessary to sink everything to maintain some foundation-stone of the State; but we have outlived and outgrown those times. Our work now is not of combat or maintenance, but of progress. There is nothing to hinder our broad and continuous advance, and the duty of the senator is to pilot and control that advance.

In such a work, however, he must of necessity follow leaders, and after giving proof of honour and honesty and capacity for sound judgment, it becomes the duty of the ordinary candidate for Parliament to name his leader, to state plainly which party he will follow, for under existing systems the fiction of the independent member is scarcely worth considering. Party government is the Government under which we live, and with one party, under one set of leaders, the useful member in Parliament must elect to serve, and therefore the duty of the elector in making his choice is to judge not only of the candidate but of the party to which he is attached. And what must he require from that party? He may discover an answer by resolving what he desires for the State—a broad and free progress. Then let him see that the leaders are men of vigorous action, of broad and enlightened views, adding to the administrative faculty that political initiative which is far more important in a forming State than in a land grown old and developed almost to the verge of possibility. Is it a rising, bettering place in the world? Then let him be careful to see that his leaders are men abreast of all the possibilities and necessities of the colony and of all the tides of the time—not great Australians only, but men whose minds "make willing movement with the larger sweep of the world's forces." These are the essential qualifications of leaders, and, in greater or less degree, these must be found in all who aspire to lead. For these, then, should the elector look, but not first. In the Minister as in the member, honour and honesty, the true motive, the pure intent, are the first essentials. If these be lacking, the duty of rejection is clear. But, being satisfied with these, the wider outlook must be taken, and the man and the party chosen whose competency for broad advancement is most clearly displayed.

Electors in choosing that party cannot do better than study the larger acts of the late Administration, and the criticisms passed upon them by the late Opposition. So doing, they will not have much difficulty in arriving at a sound judgment as to fitness to lead. The foundations of honour and honesty have received no effective assailment on either side, for abuse must not be mistaken for rational charge, nor most venomous calumny for proof. We may assume the honourable intent to exist on both sides, and have chiefly to judge of the higher and worthier intent, and the best capacity for giving it effect.

In commenting upon the opening of the Trades Union Congress the other day, we referred to the sensible manner in which many of the labour organisations deal with certain questions of common interest as between themselves and capitalists. A good illustration of the remark was furnished by a discussion which took place in the Congress on Thursday last. One of the delegates drew attention to the case of some seamen belonging to the John Elder, who, it will be remembered, were sent to prison for refusing to work on the holiday that was proclaimed in connection with the Eight-hour Demonstration; and he suggested that a deputation should be appointed to wait upon the Minister to complain of the miscarriage of justice that had taken place in imprisoning those men. A few years ago an incident of this kind, if mentioned in a meeting of working men, would probably have excited an angry and one-sided debate, in which a great deal would have been said about the tyranny of capital, and of collusion of the administrators of justice with the employers of labour. And there were some members of the Congress who manifested a determination to bring about, if possible, such a discussion. Mr. Trenwith, for example, supported the suggestion in a speech which was full of the spirit of antagonism. But the majority of the members set themselves against the recommendation of extremists, and bore it down by a series of arguments which were creditable to their intelligence and good sense, and which proved, moreover, that the speakers have acquired the habit of looking at subjects in which they are interested from every side. They saw clearly that the fact that the Government had proclaimed a public holiday on the occasion of the Eight-hour Celebration did not justify the seamen of the John Elder in declining to work on that day. This was taking the law into their own hands, and the feeling of the Congress was that that ought not to be tolerated, and that agreements made by working-men ought to be strictly observed, regardless of the inconvenience that might be occasioned by adherence thereto. The Congress are to be congratulated upon having treated the matter in this way; and so long as they insist upon fair play being shown to employers as well as to themselves they will be rewarded with the respect and confidence of the community.

Whatever those who live by sport may think, the Hon. James White may be complimented by the public upon his straightforward announcement of his intention with regard to the colt Nordenfeldt. Nordenfeldt's name must be familiar to most readers, and when it is remembered that he won four races at the late A. J. C. meeting, that he is regarded by judges as the best colt of the season, and stands first favourite for the Victorian Derby at the exceedingly short price of four to one, the significance of the announcement will be better understood. The hon. gentleman desires it to be publicly known that he will win with a horse of his own breeding if he can, and Monte Christo and Uralla being well on the day of the race, he will not start Nordenfeldt. This is true gentlemanly sport and honour without compulsion. There was nothing whatever to prevent Mr. White from scratching his colt at the post, and laughing, as some other owners have done, in the face of a deluded and enraged public. But Mr. White chooses to guard the public against the ring, and give a fair and open caution, which should be largely taken. It is important also that people who dabble with racing, either in "straight-out" bets or "doubles," should recognise the full meaning of the caution given. It is not stated plainly that the horse will not start. His absence depends upon the fitness of his stable mates, and those who choose to back either the one or the other must reckon, not upon chances of speed and stay only, but upon all the manifold contingencies of training, which, for such races as the V.R.C. Derby and Cup, are calculated to find out every possible weakness, and to attach fatal results to even the slightest mistake. Within the past week we have seen Newstead, a hot favourite through all the winter months, break down hopelessly beaten; Helene, entrusted with thousands of pounds of public money, die of inflammation in her box; Normanby, who would certainly "bring the Cup home to Bathurst," struck out of all engagements; and Philip Augustus, spoken of as a sure thing in the Maribyrnong Plate, brought down to a very sick condition. When to all these disasters, and the consequences they entail, Mr. White's timely and manly warning is added, a very fair case is made out, even for those most sportingly inclined, either to let the whole business severely alone, or follow the familiar counsel and wait till they go to the post.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

At noon on Saturday an Executive Council meeting was held at Government House, and Sir Patrick Jennings was sworn in as Colonial Secretary. Sir Patrick being from town when he consented to join the Ministry, it was, we are informed, left an open question whether he should take the office he now holds or that of Colonial Treasurer. Mr. Dibbs gave him the choice, and on his return from the country he elected to take the office of Colonial Secretary. Mr. Dibbs will, therefore, remain in the Treasury.

Nothing further with regard to the resignation of Mr. Farnell from his office in the Government as Minister for Justice transpired on Saturday, and as some of the Ministers have left town to visit their electorates, nothing will be done for a few days, we understand, towards appointing Mr. Farnell's successor.

H.M.S. Miranda, with Rear-Admiral Tryon, the Commander-in-chief of the station, on board, returned to port yesterday, mooring in Farm Cove at about 3 in the afternoon. The Miranda, it will be remembered, left Brisbane and proceeded to Townsville, Cooktown, and Thursday Island, the principal object of her cruise being the visit to the latter place. It is believed that the result of the Admiral's examination will be the fortification of the island, as its suitability for use in the scheme for the defence of the colonies was highly thought of. The Admiral and the officers were the recipients of the courtesies of the Hon. J. Douglas, the resident, and others of the islanders, and the stay there was of an enjoyable character. Otherwise the cruise was devoid of interest.

On Saturday evening Sir Henry Parkes addressed a large open-air meeting of the electors of St. Leonards, from the balcony of Mr. Darton's hotel, in Walker-street. The candidate had a fair hearing, and a vote to the effect that he was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Edmund Barton, lately the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, addressed about 1000 of his constituents—electors of East Sydney—on Saturday night, from the balcony of Ryan's Hotel, Oxford-street. His reception was an enthusiastic one; his speech, which is reported in another column, was frequently applauded, and the vote of confidence in him was carried almost unanimously. The opinions expressed by Mr. Barton were in effect those he promulgated when he came before the electors three years ago; but at the close of his address he said, in answer to a question from Mr. M'Elhone, that he did not think Mr. Wright should have accepted the office of Minister for Works, and that, in his opinion, the Constitution Act, which now admitted of a member of Parliament being a contractor with the Government, as a member of an incorporated company, should be amended. The company, instead of numbering seven persons, should consist of 30, and all those should be bona-fide shareholders. Mr. M'Elhone announced his intention of supporting Mr. Barton's candidature.

We understand that Mr. Secretary Wright—having taken into consideration a request preferred by the dredge employés that their hours of labour, which at present averaged 8½ hours per day, should be reduced to 8 hours—has decided to comply with the petition, subject to such modifications as the necessities of sea service and tide work may from time to time demand.

One of the numerous patents brought under the notice of the Rabbit Conference, whose labours have only recently been brought to a conclusion, was Bain's wire fencing, for which, as of course for all other patents, especial advantages were claimed. Mr. T. H. Myring, chief of the rabbit branch, paid a visit to Mr. Learmouth's estate, at Ashfield, on Saturday, for the purpose of inspecting the fence. The wire is passed through wooden posts fixed in the ground at interval of 16 yards. Between the posts, at intervals of two yards, are patent iron rods, containing seven notches at short intervals, through which the wire is threaded. By this means the wire is supported and prevented from getting out of position, or from being bulged out by the onslaughts of kangaroos. Patent steel standards, pointed for insertion in the ground, might be substituted for the wooden posts where the country would permit of it, the standards being placed at intervals of eight yards. It was stated that it would be very easy to fix the wire netting on a fence of this kind. The advantages of the fence for certain kinds of country were admitted, and it was considered especially well adapted for parts where timber was scarce.

The Primate delivered an address last night in St. Andrew's Cathedral on electoral duty. In the course of his remarks the Bishop said that he was induced to refer to this subject by the nearness of the elections. He laid it down that it was a sacred duty for every man to exercise his right as an elector, and not to keep aloof through cowardice or fastidiousness. While the electors were right in ascertaining that the main views of candidates were agreeable to their own views he held that representatives should not be bound down by petty restrictions, but be left to exercise their judgment for the welfare of the colony. The candidate who came forward from motives of self-seeking, flinging scurrilous and slanderous invectives right and left, committed a positive treason—the treason of a base and culpable folly; while the man who, to advance his ends in politics, deliberately traded on the bad passions and petty class jealousies of humanity, committed the deadlier treason of base, deliberate wickedness.

Dr. Jefferis concluded, last evening, his series of lectures on "Spinster Life" by delivering one on the peculiarly attractive subject of "Betrothal and Bridal." The audience was one of the most numerous that has ever assembled in the church.

The petition prepared by the officers of the Pitt-street Congregational Church, in opposition to an application which is about to be made for a publican's license for premises to be erected on land adjoining the church property, was on Sunday evening, 4th instant, signed by about 500 persons. Dr. Jefferis, in referring to the petition last evening, said he understood from the magistrates that it was the largest one of a similar character ever presented in the city. Dr. Jefferis had no doubt that what was desired would be accomplished by the petition. Those who were interested in the subject would be able to realise what straits the promoters of the public-house were reduced to when they learnt that in asking for signatures to a petition in support of the application for a license, the canvassers characterised the church, in the hearing of a member of it, as a "den of infamy."

The Rev. Dr. Jefferis, in announcing from the pulpit of the Congregational Church, Pitt-street last evening, the lecture, under the auspices of the Christian Evidence Society, to be given by the Hon. Alexander Gordon, Q.C., M.L.C., in the Protestant Hall on Tuesday evening, said that to many of those present it would be surrounded with peculiar interest, as it would probably be the last public utterance of Mr. Gordon in this colony. Dr. Jefferis added that he grieved to say that Mr. Gordon was about to leave the colony for settlement in England. He had rendered great and good service to the social interests of our city, as well as to the cause of religion, and it was sincerely hoped that many would be present at the Protestant Hall, for the sake of the lecture and to do honour to Mr. Gordon.

It is notified by advertisement that the council of the Clergy Daughters' School, Waverley, being anxious to extend more widely the advantages of the institution as a place of high education upon a sound religious basis, and finding that the foundation, even with the aid of subscriptions, is insufficient to enable them to do this, have resolved to admit a number of non-foundationers, not exceeding 20, to be nominated by members of the council, at the usual terms of high-class schools in Sydney. In order to carry out this resolution, they have commenced a considerable extension of the building, which will be ready in February next. By this action they hope to be able at once to increase the number of foundationers, who must be daughters of clergy, from 16 to 20, and to render the school in a short time self-supporting; while, at the same time, they offer to parents other than clergy a place for the education of their daughters not unlike the "girls' high schools" which have attained so much success in England, uniting high educational advantages with sound religious training. In the meanwhile, they need, we understand, assistance towards the expenses of the new buildings, which will cost about £2500.

The Rev. J. M. Garavel, a Roman Catholic clergyman holding a high place of respect among his co-religionists, and who has been for some time in charge of St. Thomas' Church, Petersham, died on Friday last. In the circles in which the deceased priest's labours and services were best known and appreciated, his 36 years of active missionary life here and in New Zealand are spoken of in terms of gratitude and graceful remembrance. After spending some 16 years among the Maoris, Father Garavel was invited to Sydney by the late Archbishop Polding, and he continued in this diocese till his death, having been at different periods pastor of St. Charles', Waverley; St. Joseph's, Newtown; St. Bede's, Pyrmont; and St. Thomas', Petersham. Father Garavel's remains were interred on Saturday morning in that part of the Petersham cemetery set apart for the graves of priests and other religious. Pere. Joly, S.M., conducted the rites of burial, and nearly all the clergy of the diocese assisted at the obsequies.

The Rev. E. R. Grant, who has recently arrived from England to take charge of the Unitarian Church, Liverpool-street, preached his inaugural sermon yesterday morning.

The memorial shield of St. Albans parsonage, Five Dock, was laid on Saturday afternoon by Mrs. Barry, wife of the Primate. Dr. Barry was present and delivered an address. A fuller account of the proceedings is held over.

On Saturday afternoon the central committee of the Local Option League met at the Temperance Hall, Mr. J. B. Sedgwick in the chair. Many letters from the suburbs and the country were tabled. The sitting was a long one, and, as there was not time enough to transact all the important business, it was decided to meet again this afternoon. Before closing, certain facts were brought under the notice of the committee, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—"That, in view of the fact that a large number of publicans have 'boycotted' many of those candidates for seats in Parliament who have pledged themselves in favour of full local option, by refusing to rent their commercial rooms for committee uses to these friends of the people, this league respectfully asks trustees of day and Sunday schools to rent their premises to all candidates who are advocating the right of the people to control the liquor traffic, and thus strengthen the hands of the men who are working in the cause of humanity for a beneficial reform of the Licensing Act, and in so doing are seeking to improve the social and moral order of our community." This action of the publicans was strongly commented on by a member, who said he had occasionally heard of the so-called tyranny of teetotallers; but this attempt to choke the voice of the people exceeded all that the bitterest opponents of local option could lay to their charge.

The Sydney Turf Club Meeting, which took place at Randwick on Saturday last, was fairly well patronised. The following were the results:—Hurdle Race, Michael; Spring Handicap, Keith; Sapling Stakes, Blairgowrie, by Vespasian from Atholine; Selling Plate, Princess of Lorne; October Handicap, Euroclydon.

The sittings of the Metropolitan Quarter Sessions were continued at Darlinghurst Courthouse on Saturday, before Judge Murray. A few cases of appeals against magistrates' decisions were heard; and the court was adjourned until to-day.

It would be well for all owners or keepers of dogs to remember that after Wednesday next, the 14th instant, they will be liable to a fine of not less than 10s. and costs for each unregistered dog found upon their premises. Where the owner of a dog resides more than 10 miles from the nearest police court, he may register such dog by transmitting to the clerk of petty sessions the usual description form duly filled up and signed, and postage stamps to the value of 2s. 6d.

The accident occurred on the 8th instant. Deceased was a single man, about 36 years of age. The coroner has been informed of the occurrence.

London Figaro of August 29 thus speaks of Lord and Lady Carrington:—"Although the New South Wales people have been justly congratulated upon the fact that Lord Carrington is shortly to take possession of Government House, Sydney, the approaching departure of the Governor to the scene of his new duties is regretted by a large circle of friends in the old country, who will in various ways testify their regard before he quits these shores. The popularity enjoyed and deserved by Lord Carrington is shared by Lady Carrington, of whom it may confidently be predicted that she will earn in the colony which is soon to be her home for a number of years the affection of many and the esteem of all."

In our last issue, under the heading of "Promotion of Pupil Teachers," the names of William J. Bateson, Camperdown, and Phillip J. Nelligan, Plunkett-street, were inadvertently misplaced. They should appear gazetted as principal teachers to class I.A., the highest classification in the Department of Public Instruction.

COONABARABRAN, Saturday.

An influential and representative meeting has been held here in support of a petition from the Denman people urging upon the Government the construction of a line of railway from Muswellbrook to Cassilis, thence to Walgett via Coolah and Coonabarabran, and Baradine. It was suggested that Mudgee should be connected by a branch line to Coolah, which would give the north-western residents the choice of the Northern or Western line, and relieve the overcrowded state of the Blue Mountains line.

GRAFTON, Saturday.

The friends of Mr. Jno. See have decided to entertain him at a banquet on Thursday evening next.

Very fair entries have been received for the flower show, which opens here on Wednesday, and will be held in the society's pavilion, instead of in the Town Hall, as heretofore.

The land office returns for the last quarter, at Grafton, are as follows:—Conditional purchases, £1359 18s. 6d.; sundries, £187 13s. 3d.; auction sales, £831 15s. 8d.; total, £2379 7s. 5d.

A whole team of bullocks, with a dray load of maize and some supplies belonging to a selector named Small, were recently burnt near Coff's Harbour, through being caught in a bush fire. Twelve of the bullocks were burnt alive, while the remaining two had subsequently to be destroyed. A man named Talbot, who went to the assistance of the teamster, nearly lost his life. He became stifled with the smoke, fell in a helpless condition, and would have perished had he not been dragged away.

GUNDAGAI, Saturday.

On Monday last a young man named Timothy Flynn, residing near Jugiong, was riding a horse when the animal bucked and threw the rider, who fell on his head and dislocated his neck, death being the result. An inquest was held on Tuesday, when a verdict in accordance with the facts stated was recorded.

HAY, Saturday.

A change took place in the weather early this morning, and it has been raining heavily since 5 o'clock, 45 points having been registered. The downpour seems likely to continue. Rain has also fallen at Balranald and several other places in the district.

MURWILLUMBAH, Saturday.

The residents of the Tweed River district are beginning to look upon Queensland as their colony, and Brisbane as their natural market, especially when a bid is being made by Queensland for the Tweed River trade. Complaints are heard in every direction relative to the river not being opened up, and the uncertainty that exists in connection with railway communication with Grafton.

Further travels higher up the Tweed River disclose the fact that the sugar cane is affected by the late frost to a much greater extent than in the Cudgen district. The frost has been rather erratic in its attacks, some plantations not being touched, and although adjoining, others have been completely destroyed by it, the same description of cane being grown in both instances. The frost has been most severe in places where it had never appeared in previous seasons. It will, however, be next year before the full weight of the misfortune is felt; and after all, things are not nearly so bad as on the Richmond and Clarence. Several individual plantations have turned out exceedingly well on the Tweed River. Four at Tumbulgum, the junction of the north and south arms, averaged 70 tons per acre, and others are estimated to turn out up to 100 tons for a few acres.

The weather is still very hot and sultry. Grass is plentiful everywhere, but water is getting scarce.

NEWCASTLE, Saturday.

The weather here is intensely hot.

PENRITH, Sunday.

A new Anglican church (St. Alban's) was opened at Rooty Hill to-day by the Rev. G. Brown. The building will cost £770, and the sum of £650 has already been subscribed and promised.

Messrs. Richardson and Wrench held a most successful sale of portion of the Tinsdale Estate here on Saturday. Upwards of 1500 people were present, and the bidding for business and villa sites was very brisk. About £12,000 worth of land was disposed of, and every lot offered, with about two exceptions, was sold.

An unmarried woman committed suicide at St. Mary's on Friday night by strangling herself with a piece of ribbon.

WAGGA WAGGA, Sunday.

Mr. A. Davidson, jun., of Mandamah West run, has reported to the Inspector of Stock that a man found two rabbits, one month old, in the Crooked Corner Paddock on the run.

Rain fell here last night, and 65 points were registered. The downpour was heavier in the outside districts.

THE ST. LEONARDS ELECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—At the meeting last night, in the Masonic Hall, Mr. Dibbs referred to a charge made against the Government of having divided the runs so as "to give the whole of the water frontages of the rivers to the squatters, leaving all the back sterile country to the free selectors." From the back of the hall several persons, speaking as confidently as if they knew something about the facts, called out, "So they have."

Now, three words will set this matter in a clear light, and I regret I did not get the chance to say them at the time. The condition of the runs before the passing of the Act of 1884 is better known to me than to most people in the colony; and I say this, that whatever errors may have been made in the division of stations, this particular course of action was impossible, simply because almost all the river frontages had been already sold, either by the Parkes-Robertson Ministry, or by preceding Ministries, in almost all of which the name of either Parkes or Robertson is to be found.

I myself have criticised the Act of 1884 in respect to the method of these divisions, but I did so prompted by regret that the grand national policy put forward by Mr. Stuart in 1882 was so imperfectly embodied in Mr. Farnell's measure and its subsequent administration.

I always felt, and feel now, that the new law, with its many imperfections, is still an infinite improvement on the policy of 1861, which unhappily still clings to our system, and will continue to hamper the new policy until the confusion which it has produced has been disentangled.

There is more hope of the Act of 1884 working well than there ever was.

But, even without further amendment, the establishment of local administration by the land boards and the stoppage of the reckless sales which despoiled the country constitute unalloyed benefits to the community. Yours, &c.,

North Shore, October 10. GEORGE RANKEN.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

SYDNEY TURF CLUB.

Patron, his Excellency the Right Honorable Lord Augustus Loftus, G.C.B.; judge, Mr. A. Town; handicapper, Mr. J. A. Scarr; starter, Mr. W. Gannon; clerk of the course, Mr. J. Ashworth; secretary, Mr. T. S. Clibborn.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10.

A strong northerly wind rendered things very unpleasant at Randwick on Saturday last, but fortunately the committee had taken the precaution of having the road well watered, so that there was very little dust. Considering the great number of race meetings that have followed each other in rapid succession during the last two months, the attendance was fairly numerous, and the grand and St. Leger stands were well patronised. The lawn looked fresh and verdant, and the Permanent Artillery Band performed a variety of selections during the afternoon. The new idea of prohibiting hired vehicles from going on to the centre of the course had the effect of giving the general public on the flat a better opportunity of seeing the races, and, as ample accommodation was provided in the paddock set apart for horses, those who drove on to the course had not any cause for complaint. The Fish, who met Cymbal on a stone better terms than at Rosehill, was made a firm favourite for the Hurdle Race at even money, but he failed to stay it out, and was beaten a head for second place by Cymbal, who in turn finished a neck behind Michael. Although the winner had not been backed to any extent by the public, his victory gave general satisfaction, for he has always been fairly ridden out: and his win will be gratifying news to his owner, Mr. John Phillip, who is at present quarantined with his family at North Head. Sunray, who looked faded and weary, fell over the last jump, and remained stunned on the ground for some time. Recruit was regarded as a really fine thing for the Spring Handicap, but, after having made a deal of running, compounded when called upon at the home turn, and Keith won a well-contested race from the well-bred Phaon. The popular clerk of the course, Mr. James Ashworth, seldom had greater pleasure in escorting a winner back to scale, for he had drawn him in Adams's consultation sweep of £1000. At first My Lady was most in demand for the Sapling Stakes; but while the youngsters were wending their way to the post, Montem was so liberally backed that when the flag fell he was a firm favourite at 2 to 1. However, he never showed prominently in any part of the race, and Blairgowrie won very easily from Kingfish, My Lady, Clio, and Hoodwink, who finished in a cluster. The winner was trained by T. Lamond, who won the two-year-old race at Rosehill on the 3rd with Chesham, and is by Vespasian (imp.) from the imported mare Atholine (the dam of the Maribyrnong Plate winners Habena and Norma), by Blair Athol from Habena, by Irish Birdcatcher from Bridle, by The Saddler, &c. He is a fine, big, powerful chestnut, and bids fair to be even better as a three-year-old than he is now. There was great delay before a start could be effected, in consequence of Fernandez repeatedly breaking away, and when the riders returned to the weighing-room Martin Gallagher, the rider of Fernandez, was, on the recommendation of Mr. Gannon disqualified from riding until the end of the present year for disobedience, so that he will be prevented from taking part at the V. R. C. Spring Meeting. All the other jockeys except Grant were each fined £5. Princess of Lorne won the Selling Plate without an effort, and was bought in for £85. Wanda, Desmond, Phyllis, Pet Girl, Boori, Freedom, and Polestar were withdrawn from the October Handicap, for which Folly and Friendship left the paddock in equal favour, but neither filled a place, and Euroclydon, a son of Hamlet and Zephyr, won easily from Recruit, who attempted to steal a march, and would have succeeded had not his heart failed him when asked to finish. Dagobert fell before passing the mile post, and Nerriker was insensible for some time, but was able to leave the course without assistance. The following is an account of each race:—

THE HURDLE RACE, a handicap sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each for starters, with 100 sovs. added. Second horse to receive the sweepstakes. 2 miles.

Mr. J. Phillips' ch g Michael, aged, 9st. 11lb. (Huht) 1
Mr. E. Terry's b g Cymbal, 6 years, 9st. 7lb. (Kemp) 2
Mr. O. K. King's b g The Fish, aged, 9st. 7lb. (Talbot) ... 3
Mr. J. Phillips ns ch g Manumission, aged, 9st. 9lb. (Carter) ... 0
Mr. H. Bennett's b g Sunray, aged, 9st. 9lb. (Miller) ... 0

Betting: Even on The Fish, 2 to 1 v. Cymbal, 4 to 1 v. Michael, 6 to 1 v. any other.

The Fish made the running at a very slow pace until passing the stand, when Cymbal went to the front, but nearly came down at the flight in the straight, and the favourite was again left in command. The two leaders showed the way along the far side of the course on terms, the horse getting stronger. The Fish rapped the fence at the two mile post very hard, and nearly came to grief, but he was well recovered, and led into the straight. After clearing the last jump Cymbal challenged him, and the pair settled down to finish, and it looked like a match between them, until Michael dashed up on the left, and, outpacing the pair, won a pretty race by a long neck from Cymbal, who beat The Fish by a head for second place. Manumission was a bad fourth, and Sunray, who was evidently very weak, fell at the last fence. Time: 4 minutes, 20 seconds.

THE SPRING HANDICAP, a handicap sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each for starters, with 100 sovs. added; second horse to receive the sweepstakes. 6 furlongs.

Mr. W. Northern's b c Keith, 3 years, by Goldsbrough—Amphrite, 6st. 10lb. (English) 1
Mr. T. Lamond ns ch c Phaon, 3 years, 5st. 6lb. (Nicholson) ... 2
Mr. J. L. Brown's g m Gretna, 6 years, 7st. 2lb. (Harris) ... 3
Mr. A. F. Smart's br c Burrilda, 3 years, 7st. 6lb. (J. Gough) ... 0
Mr. John Wood's ch g Recruit, 6 years, 7st. 3lb. (Kelso) ... 0
Mr. J. Allsop ns ch g Cestus, 6 years, 6st. 7lb. (S. Kane) ... 0
Mr. T. Stewart's bl c Bon Accord, 3 years, 6st. 7lb. (Fielder) ... 0
Mr. J. Gough's b c Clarendon, 3 years, 6st. 7lb. (Gorman) ... 0

Betting: 2 to 1 v. Recruit, 3 to 1 v. Phaon, 4 to 1 v. Keith, 6 to 1 v. any other.

Recruit, Phaon, Burrilda, were the first to move from a good start, and Kelso at once taking Recruit to the front, led past the trainers' stand and round the bend by four lengths, attended by Phaon, Clarendon, and the others clustered, except Cestus, who dwelt at the post, and was never in it afterwards. Recruit turned into the straight, pulling double, but was caught by Phaon, before reaching the distance, he collapsed most unmistakably, and Phaon looked all over a winner, until Keith came out when 100 yards from home, and, cutting him down, won by a short half-length. Gretna was third, scarcely two lengths away, and then came Cestus, Burrilda, Clarendon, Recruit, and Bon Accord. Time, 1 minute 16 seconds.

THE SAPLING STAKES.—Sweepstakes of 5 sovs. each for starters, with 250 sovs. added; for two-years-old; second horse 50 sovs. from the prize. Half-a-mile.

Mr. D. Cooper's ch c Blairgowrie, by Vespasian—Atholine, 8st. (Nicholson) ... 1
Mr. W. Stockton ns br c Kingfish, by Piscatorious—Yatterina, 8st. (Kelso) ... 2
Mr. W. H. Kent's b f My Lady, by Vespasian—First Lady, 8st. 9lb., including 7lb. penalty (Harris) ... 3
Mr. A. F. Smart's br c Montem, 8st. (Gough) ... 0
Mr. W. Cooper's bl c Fernandez, 8st. (Gallagher) ... 0
Mr. A. E. Cornwell's b f Clio, 7st. 9lb. (Phipps) ... 0
Mr. J. Monaghan ns b f Hoodwink, 7st. 9lb. (Nerricker) ... 0
Mr. T. Stewart's b f Mary Anderson, 7st. 9lb. (Grant) ... 0

Betting: 2 to 1 v. Montem, 5 to 2 v. My Lady, 3 to 1 v. Clio, 6 to 1 v. Blairgowrie, 6 to 10 to 1 v. any other.

After innumerable breaks away, caused by Fernandez, the signal was given to a good start: but they spread out immediately, and Blairgowrie appeared at the front, followed by Fernandez and My Lady. They ran in the same order to the home turn, when Kingfish went up second, but could never approach Blairgowrie, who won easily by nearly three lengths from Kingfish, My Lady, Clio, and Hoodwink, who had short necks between them, and two lengths from the last-named came Fernandez, followed by Montem and Mary Anderson. Time, 51½ seconds.

THE SELLING PLATE.—Of 100 sovs.; for three-years-old and upwards. The winner to be sold for £125. Selling allowances. One mile.

Mr. H. Raynor's b m Princess of Lorne, nil, by Captivator—Princess Louise, aged, 7st 1lb (English) ... 1
Mr. R. J. Mason's b g Dictator, £25, aged, 7st 8lb (Kelso) ... 2
Mr. E. M'Carthy's ch g Beaumont, nil, 6 years, 7st 8lb (Nerriker) ... 3
Mr. P. W. Hall's b g Harkaway, nil, 4 years, 7st (M'Dowall) ... 0

Betting: 5 to 2 on Princess of Lorne, 5 to 2 v. Dictator, 4 to 1 v. Beaumont, 6 to 1 v. Harkaway.

Dictator jumped off in front, and led until half way up the straight; when Princess of Lorne passed him without being extended, and won easily by three lengths from Dictator, who was the same distance in front of Beaumont, and Harkaway was four lengths off. Time: 1 minute 49½ seconds.

THE OCTOBER HANDICAP.—A handicap sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each for starters, with 100 sovs. added; second horse to receive the sweepstakes. One mile and a quarter.

Mr. P. W. Hall's b g Euroclydon, aged, by Hamlet—Zephyr, 6st. 4lb. (Fielder) ... 1
Mr. John Wood's ch g Recruit, 6 years, 6st. 10lb. (M'Dowall) 2
Mr. J. Gough's b c Clarendon, 3 years, 6st. (Skane) ... 3
Mr. A. E. Cornwall's ch m Folly, 4 years, 6st. 10lb. (Phipps) 0
Mr. S. W. Knight's b h Dagobert, 6 years, 7st. 7lb. (Nerriker), fell.
Mr. W. Kelso's b m Friendship, 6 years, 7st. 5lb. (Kelso) ... 0
Mr. E. M'Carthy's br m Morceau, 5 years, 7st. (English) ... 0

Betting: 5 to 2 each v. Friendship and Folly, 4 to 1 v. Dagobert, 5 to 1 v. Euroclydon and the others.

A good start sent Folly and Recruit away with a slight advantage, and Recruit forcing the pace, led past the mile post by nearly 10 lengths, followed by Euroclydon and Clarendon. Here Dagobert fell, and gave Nerriker a severe shaking. Carrying on the running at a sound pace, Recruit led along the back of the course, up the hill, and to the trainers' stand, where he began to fall back to his horses and his lead had been reduced to a couple of lengths by Clarendon and Euroclydon, who were racing on terms, two lengths clear of Folly and Morceau. Very little change took place until the distance was reached, when Euroclydon made his effort, and wearing down Recruit, defeated him by three lengths. Clarendon was two lengths away, and the same distance in front of Folly, who finished a length in advance of Friendship, while Morceau was beaten a long way. Time, 2 minutes 12 seconds.

The general settling will take place at Tattersall's, and at Metropolitan Tattersall's, this evening.

Trainers and trainers are reminded that the general entry for the forthcoming V. R. C. Spring Meeting is to close at 4 p.m. to-day.

VICTORIA AMATEUR TURF CLUB SPRING MEETING.

FIRST DAY.

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

The Victoria Amateur Turf Club was unfortunate in having a wet, disagreeable day for the opening of the Spring Meeting at Caulfield. Up to 1 o'clock it seemed probable that the racing would have been got through with nothing more unpleasant than a threatening sky, so that the rain did not seriously affect the attendance. Although it was bleak and forbidding overhead, there was no discomfort under foot, the grass in the reserves having been cut so short that it held no moisture, and the porous soil absorbed the showers as quickly as they fell. The attendance was actually the largest ever seen on the Guineas Day at Caulfield, and, but for the unfavourable promise of the morning, the best Caulfield Cup statistics would certainly have been beaten. The meeting was remarkable chiefly for the victories of Acme in the Foal Stakes, which, after her recent win in the Richmond Stakes, improves her chance for the Maribyrnong Plate. Ringmaster's win was an easy defeat of the favourite, Monte Christo, and had the effect of making him the foremost favourite for the V. R. C. Derby.

The results of the racing are as under:—

MAIDEN PLATE, of 150 sovs., with a sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each added—1 mile.

Mr. N. Wilson's Recall, 7st. 7lb. (Robertson) 1
Mr. C. H. T. Hart's Jocular, 8st. 5lb. (Hutchins) 2
Mr. W. Bland's Egbert, 7st. 7lb. (Cope) 3

Medea, St. Albert, Lucky Hit, Highland Chief, Hemeloch, The Trawler, Cyclops, Plympton, All Back, Local Option, St. Odille, Sedition, Buttress, Parody, and Girofla also started.

Betting: 6 to 4 v. Jocular, 6 to 1 each v. Lucky Hit, St. Odille; 7 to 1 each v. Highland Chief and Cyclops, 8 to 1 v. Recall.

There were a couple of false starts. When the flag fell, the field broke away in straggling order, Highland Chief being quickest on his legs, while Lucky Hit had rather the worst of it. Highland Chief led towards the back, followed by Jocular, Recall, St. Albert, and Buttress, Lucky Hit still being last. At back of the course Highland Chief still carried on the running, with Jocular, Egbert, and Local Option close beside him. Egbert went to the front just after they turned from the back, where Highland Chief dropped behind already beaten. From this point Lucky Hit also improved his position. As they approached the turn the horses next behind Egbert were Recall, St. Albert, Jocular, and Sedition. Jocular was the first to show round into the turn, having made his effort at this point. Just below the distance Recall was brought out, and, coming home strongly, won easily by four lengths from Jocular, who was about two lengths ahead of Egbert. Time, 1 minute 46½ seconds.

FIRST HURDLE RACE, of 100 sovs., added to a sweepstake of 3 sovs each. 1½ mile.

Mr. J. Cripps' Duration, 11st. 6lb. (M'Leod) 1
Mr. W. Little's Problem, 10st. 7lb. (Garaner) 2
Mr. H. Chifney's Chatsworth, 9st. 9lb. (Cope) 3

Student, Gasalier, Master Pinetop, Mistake, Despatch, Flamborough, Molrow, Vanderbilt, and Vernet also started.

Betting: 4 to 1 v. Duration, 5 to 1 each v. Master Pinetop and Mistake, 7 to 1 each v. Gasalier and Flamborough, 8 to 1 v. Vernet.

After one false start they went away all together. Duration at once took the lead, with Vernet and Molrow next. Before they reached the first hurdle Vernet went to the front, but opposite the stand Vanderbilt passed him, and led round the side, followed by Vernet, Mistake, Flamborough, Problem, Duration, with Molrow last. Up the hill Vanderbilt kept his lead, with Vernet still close behind him, but before they reached the back Vanderbilt lost his lead. The foremost horses were Vernet, Flamborough, and Duration almost in a line, with Problem and Gasalier following in that order. Vanderbilt again became prominent at the back of the course, with Mistake, Problem, and Duration as his next attendants. Turning down along the railway fence Vanderbilt and Mistake showed slightly in advance of the others, with Duration and Problem next, Master Pinetop coming fast through his horses, but as yet a long way from the front. Gasalier came up and joined Mistake at the turn, but Duration shot out just as the bend was passed, and was the first to show in the straight. Mistake looked like making a race home with him, but striking the last hurdle he came down heavily, and Duration galloped to the post an easy winner by four lengths from Problem. Time, 3 minutes.

GREAT FOAL STAKES, of 15 sovs. each, with 300 sovs. added; for two-year-olds; 4 furlongs.

Hon. J. White's Acme, 7st. 10lb. (Hales) 1
Mr. S. Miller's Munwyrtina, 8st. (Burton) ... ... +
Mr. W. D. Robertson's The Nun, 7st. 10lb. (Moore) ... ... +
+ Dead heat

Defrauder, Manxman II. (late Manxman), Uranus, Dividend, Damocles, Edith, Essie, Lottie, Clelia, Anita, and Maddelina, also started.

Betting: 6 to 4 v. Acme; 4 to 1 each v. The Nun and Maddelina; 8 to 1 v. Anita and Dividend.

A lot of trouble took place at the post in getting them off, one break-away following the other in quick succession. The horses broke away over a dozen times. Finally, when the flag went down, Clelia had the best of the start, with Lottie and Anita close beside her. Munwyrtina then rushed to the front, and had the lead to the sodwall, the favourite on the outside struggling to get round the horses in front of her. At the sodwall Acme got clear, and at once took the lead, closely followed by The Nun, Anita, and Lottie, while Damocles drove the others along. The Nun showed first round the turn into the straight, with Acme and Munwyrtina close to her. These three drew clear away from the others for the finish. The Nun and Munwyrtina were ridden hard, but Hales was not moving on the favourite. In the last 50 yards Acme was shaken up, and, coming out at once, won comfortably by a long neck, whilst the Nun and Munwyrtina made a dead heat for second place. Time, 52 seconds.

The following is a list of the winners of the

Year.	Horse.	Pedigree.	Time.
			Secs.
1881	Fryingpan	Bethnal Green—Saucepan	50½
1882	St. Lawrence	Glorious—Perfection	53½
1883	David	The Gondolier—Alice Drew	51½
1884	Ringmaster	First King—Yardley	55½

CAULFIELD GUINEAS of 10 sovs. each, with 300 sovs. added, for three-year-olds; second horse to receive 75 sovs., and the third horse 35 sovs. 1 mile.

Mr. J. Wilsons', jun., Ringmaster, 8st. 5lb. (Moore) 1
Mr. A. R. Robertson's Dunlop, 8st. 5lb. (Robertson) 2
Mr. J. Monaghan ns Eagle Grange, 8st. 5lb. (M'Grade) 3

Parwan, Monte Christo, Melodious, Lady Claudia, and Juanna also started.

Betting: 5 to 2 v. Monte Christo, 3 to 1 v. Ringmaster, 5 to 1 against Dunlop, 100 to 15 against Juanna.

There was no delay at the start, the horses going away altogether at the first try. Lady Claudia and Ringmaster had, if anything, the best of it, and were followed in turn by Dunlop, Parwan, Juanna, Eagle Grange, Monte Christo, and Melodious. As they approached the back stretch, Dunlop took the lead, with Juanna and the favourite running at his heels. By this time the horses reached the back of the course. Directly opposite the stand Juanna passed Dunlop, and held a slight lead, with Eagle Grange last. Juanna and Dunlop raced side by side for a time; but as they approached the sod wall Melodious rushed past the pair, and had a couple of lengths' lead along the railway line towards the home turn. Monte Christo was fourth, here, and Ringmaster, who was running close at his heels, was taken up towards the leader. Both Monte Christo and Ringmaster showed amongst the foremost horses as they reached the turn, but the former never got any further. Dunlop was the first to swing round towards home, but in an instant Ringmaster tackled him, and the little horse going gamely, took a sound lead, and holding it to the post won comfortably by two lengths and a half, Dunlop second, three-quarters of a length in front of Eagle Grange, who was going well at the finish, and who beat Parwan by a head for third place. Monte Christo was fifth, Juanna sixth, Lady Claudia seventh, and Melodious last. Time, 1 minute 49 seconds.

The following is a list of winners of the Caulfield Guineas, one mile:—

Year.	Horse.	Pedigree.	Time.
1881	Wheatear	The Marquis—Spa	1.49
1882	Fryingpan	Bethnal Green—Saucepan	1.47
1883	Sardius	Emulation—Ruby	1.46
1884	Sandal	Winter Lake—Instep	1.50½
1885	Ringmaster	First King—Yardley	1.49

AUSTRALIAN HUNTERS' CUP, a trophy of the value of 150 sovs. to the winner; 2nd and 3rd horses to receive trophies of the respective values of 50 and 25 sovs. About 2½ miles.

Mr. G. S. Harris's Narrung, 12st. 2lb. (Mr. W. Glasscock) ... 1
Mr. J. Spier's Gippslander, 11st. 8lb. (owner) ... 2
Mr. A. Anderson's Abdallah, 13st. 5lb. (Mr. C. Glasscock) ... 3

Kulkyne, Spring, Robert the Devil, Chesterfield, Tanglefoot, Goldtop, Curiosity (late Duplicate), Sissy, Conrad, Jack Shepherd, and Streak of Luck also started.

Betting: 3 to 1 v. Narrung, 4 to 1 v. Tanglefoot, 6 to 1 v. Abdallah, 8 to 1 v. Spring.

The field were promptly set in motion. As they came at the first fence in the straight, Robert the Devil, Goldtop, and Chesterfield were in the leading division. As the jumps were reached the Gippslander was in front at the second fence. After passing the stand Curiosity struck a rail, and had a nasty fall. At the back Gippslander had a lead of quite a dozen lengths, Chesterfield and Robert the Devil being still his nearest attendants. Sissy, who was in the rear, ran round one of the fences, but wheeled about and was taken over at the next try. Over the sodwall and down along the railway line there was no alteration in the position. Gippslander still maintained his long lead, with Abdallah last but one. Between him and the leader there was a lot of ground. Approaching the four fences lying parallel with the straight, Gippslander had a lead of 20 lengths. Goldtop rapped the palings smartly, but his rider made a very clever recovery. Gippslander was still far in front right round to the back of the course, and it seemed as if nothing could catch him. At the farthest fence Jack Shepherd toppled over. After they passed the sodwall Gippslander tired, and Abdallah in the rear was being rushed along in an effort to lessen the gap between himself and the leader. Before they reached the straight Gippslander had slowed to a canter. Goldtop tired very much, and struck a fence and fell. The pace at which Abdallah was brought along the railway line told a tale, and by the time the turn was gained he was unable to do anything further. In the straight Narrung, who had held a good position all through, easily passed Gippslander. Had the last fence been even a stiff hurdle it must have brought him down, for instead of rising he went straight through and brushed Although he staggered he kept on his legs, and going on won by six lengths from Gippslander, who was 10 lengths in front of Abdallah. Time, 5 minutes 42 seconds.

TOORAK HANDICAP of 150 sovs., added to a sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each—1 mile.

Mr. J. Whittingham's Mentmore, 6st. 11lb. (Gray) 1
Mr. A. Selman's Too Too, 7st. 8lb. (Hughes) 2
Mr. S. Davis' Mrs. Jarley, 6st. (Huxtable) 3

Lantern, Chuckster, Dirk Hatteraick, The Ghost, Camerine, Fernlea, Kingship, Hobart, Vision, The Chanter, Evie, Sirocco, Reprise, Clarendon, Mosseface, and Wolhalla were the other starters.

Betting: 5 to 2 v. Sirocco; 4 to 1 v. Too Too; 7 to 1 each v. Hobart, Chuckster, and Kingship; 8 to 1 v. Mentmore; and 10 to 1 v. Vision.

Fernlea, Sirocco, and Chuckster showed prominently from the start, with Evie in the rear, but before they had got to the back of the course Dirk Hatteraick went past his horses and took a lead. Fernlea and Too Too were his nearest attendants, Muscat and Chuckster heading the next group. At the sod wall the lead held by Dirk Hatteraick was considerably reduced, and Too Too and Sirocco got in front. As they approached the turn, Mentmore and Mrs. Jarley singled out from the group galloping in the rear. Mentmore and Too Too came rounded into the straight close together, the latter holding a slight advantage. In the race home Mentmore was inclined to bore in, and the rider had his horse's head pulled far round to the right, and was clever enough to loose the rein just as the post was reached. Mentmore straightening his neck won a good race by a head. Too Too being two lengths and a-half in front of Mrs. Jarley. Time, 1 minute 47 seconds. A protest was lodged against Mentmore by the rider of Too Too for, crossing him at the turn, but it was dismissed.

FLEMINGTON TRAINING NOTES.

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

On Saturday morning Allander, in company with C. D., did a useful gallop of a mile, and Stonebroke was similarly engaged. Commotion moved three times round the track and tan; Plausible and Arsenal went steadily. Doncaster, who started for a round on the sand track, was brought home fast by V. C., doing the best half-mile in 56 seconds. Lavington and Tarpeia, who worked together, made four furlongs in 55 seconds, and Anarchy recorded the same spurt in 61½ seconds, Repose also going a similar journey in fast time. St. Lawrence and Trenton were stripped for a mile spin, at the end of which the New Zealander had the best of it in 1 minute 48 seconds. Kit Nubbles and Tissue went for a strong gallop of two miles. Lord Wilton and Prince Imperial started off for a fast spin, doing six furlongs in 1min. 23sec. and once round in 2min. 33sec.—a capital performance, in which the Adelaide horse shone to most advantage. The Israelite and Signor did a fast mile and a half, the former seeming to rise towards the end. Moonshee went slowly. Uralla went twice round on the outer track at three-parts pace. Tom Brown and Coronet, apparently by accident, started side by side for what turned out to be a brilliant gallop on the part of the Sydney horse, inasmuch as Coronet was early in trouble, and Tom Brown bounded along like a lion, covering 6 furlongs in 1 minute 23 seconds, then 5 furlongs in 1.8½, and the round in 2.31½, finally pulling up as though she wanted more of it, whereas Coronet was beaten off. Country Boy and St. John did a fast round together. Vanguard and Ouides worked slowly, and Ravensworth went at three-parts pace. Baronnecker did a fast mile on the tan track, and Lesbia, along with Royal Maid, covered a mile and a half at top speed. Claudian, Alpha, and Trojan did some exercise, and Scaramouche finished with a fast half-mile. Brinkman galloped six furlongs, and Midland went twice round at a useful pace, whilst Mainsail spurted home and Doneleur cantered, the whole four working on the course. As usual attention, was directed to Gratitude, when she started off at full speed for a Caulfield Cup distance gallop, which was worth looking at, for the round was covered in 2 minutes 31½ seconds, whilst a mile and a half was recorded in 2 minutes 45 seconds. The Agent and Agitation next went round an outer track in 2 minutes 34 seconds, and Wing galloped over the same ground. Nordenfeldt and Despot were next sent a mile and a half fast, at the close of which there was little to spare between them. Distiller did a sweating bout on the sand track, Kenneth and Opal did slow work, and Honeydew went a fast round in good time Off Colour and First Prince did a fast mile, followed by Lord Exeter for a strong round. The other horses did unimportant work during the morning. The fast times alluded to, no doubt, must be somewhat discounted by the strong wind which blew behind the horses in the straight run home.

MELBOURNE BETTING MARKET.

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

On Saturday night the Victorian Rooms were crowded, and some important moves were noted during the evening, particularly on the forthcoming V. R. C. Derby. The very moderate performance of Monte Christo in the Caulfield Guineas thoroughly disposed of his Derby chances; therefore the probability of Nordenfeldt being an absentee is removed. A big wager of £4000 to £1000 was taken about Nordenfelt, and then £3000 to £1000 was offered. First Chester was also backed to win £6000 at 6 to 1. 8000 to 1000 was wanted about Isonomy, but 6 to 1 was the most liberal offer. Dunlop and Monte Christo were on the downward track, 25 to 1 and 33 to 1 being offered respectively. Ringmaster, on the other hand advanced, and no more than 8 to 1 could be obtained, but this price did not lead to business. For the Caulfield Cup, Gratitude was supported to the amount of £5000 at 20 to 1. 1000 to 30 was taken and wanted about Mozart, whilst 1000 was written down to Too Too, when 33 to 1 was the best tender. Marie Louise was backed for £3000 at 30 to 1. St. Lawrence was backed to win £1000 at 100 to 3, when 25 to 1 remained on offer. Tom Brown's impromptu gallop with Coronet in the morning brought him into recognition. He was before befriended to some thousands at 100 to 5, whilst Lord Wilton occasionally was backed at the same figure. The Melbourne Cup betting was noticeable for two heavy transactions, viz., £20,000 about Cerise and Blue, and £15,000 about Brown and Rose at 100 to 3, whilst £40,000 was booked about Liverpool at 100 to 7. Sheet Anchor was friendless, an offer of 5000 to 250 being unnoticed. Commotion and Coronet were relegated to the knocked-out division. For the Maribyrnong Plate 4 to 1 was wanted about Acme.

The following is the betting for the Caulfield Cup:—10 to 1 v. Lord Exeter, 12 to 1 v. Velocipede, 20 to 1 v. Gratitude, 20 to 1 v. Tom Brown and Lord Wilton, 20 to 1 v. St. Lawrence, Claptrap, and St. John, 30 to 1 v. Marie Louise; 33 to 1 v. Mozart, Grace Darling, and Too Too. Maribyrnong Plate: 4 to 1 v. Acme. V. R. C. Derby: 3 to 1 v. Nordenfeldt; 6 to 1 v. First Chester and Isonomy; 8 to 1 v. Ringmaster; 10 to 1 v. Thunderbolt and Winchester; 100 to 6 v. Uralla; 25 to 1 v. Dunlop; 33 to 1 v. Monte Christo and The Pencil. Melbourne Cup: 100 to 7 v. Liverpool; 14 to 1 v. Nordenfeldt, 15 to 1 v. Lord Exeter, 20 to 1 v. Sheet Anchor, Trenton, Honeydew, and Prince Imperial; 25 to 1 v. Sardius and Tom Brown; 33 to 1 v. Cerise and Blue, Brown and Rose, and Commotion; 50 to 1 v. Coronet and Stornaway.

BRISBANE COMMERCIAL ROWING CLUB REGATTA.

BRISBANE, SUNDAY.

The regatta organised by the Commercial Rowing Club, held on Saturday, proved very successful, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators. The regatta was unusually interesting on account of the programme including the first eight-oar races ever rowed at Brisbane. Three clubs competed—the Commercial, the Brisbane, and the Kangaroo Point Clubs. The Commercial crew were the victors in the final heat.

ATHLETIC SPORTS AT ADELAIDE.

ADELAIDE, SUNDAY.

On Saturday afternoon about 5000 people witnessed the second day's sports on the Adelaide oval in connection with the Cricketing Association and the South Australian Bicycle Club. The weather was showery, with a strong wind, which militated against remarkable records. The Ten-mile Bicycle Race for the Championship of the Colonies was won by Shackelford, rather easily, with Dwyer second, Press a yard behind, and Tyler some distance in the rear. Time, 38 minutes 19 seconds. The Two-mile Handicap Tricycle Race was won by Dwyer (scratch), with Fredericks (250 yards), Roachuck (325 yards), and Holloway (scratch) in the order named. Dwyer won easily. Time, 6 minutes 51 seconds. The race of 150 yards for the championship of the colony was won by D. Roberts, the present holder, with Davison, the ex-champion, second, and Tuck third. Time, 16½ minutes.

THE ROYAL SYDNEY YACHT SQUADRON.

Following closely on the united celebration of the opening of the yachting season, the clubs have begun the series of demonstrations on their own behalf which usually ushers in the yachting period. On Saturday afternoon the Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron held its annual commencement in the form of a banquet at Cremorne and a run down the harbour, the host of the day being the Commodore, Mr. James R. Fairfax. The programme was a departure from the usual one, inasmuch as the banquet was made the first "business" item, after the necessary assembly at the rendezvous in Mosman's Bay, whither the yachts proceeded at once by previous arrangement. The weather was a great improvement on that of the previous Saturday, there being a bright sky with plenty of sunlight, and a stiff north-east yachtsman's breeze which laid the yachts over on their dripping sides, and sent the foam churning up on their lee gunwale. Having got under sail about gunfire, the yachts arrived at the smooth anchorage of Mosman's Bay in quick succession until the fleet included the Magic, Waitangi, Meteor, Assegai, Iolanthe, Oithona, Violet, Daphne, Ione, and Doris. Several of the yachts were dressed, and their occupants set off to the shore, where they presently sat down to a luncheon admirably provided by the Compagnoni Catering Company. Commodore Fairfax presided, with Vice-Commodore Milson and Mr. P. O. Williams (one of the committee) as vice-chairmen. Among those present were—Captain Hoskyns, of the Myrmidon; Captain Quinn and Dr. Simpson, of the Nelson; Captain Taylor, of the Wolverene; Captain Hixson; the Hon. Geo. Thornton, M.L.C.; the Hon. C. K. Mackellar, M.L.C.; Messrs. R. L. Tooth, H. E. A. Allan, James Milson, Alex. Oliver; Edward Reading. Dr. E. Fairfax Ross. Messrs. John Gilchrist, Alfred Fairfax, W. Smythe, S. A. Want; H. Cornwell, secretary R. S. Y. S.; C. B. Fairfax, Richard Binnie, Thos. Pugh, T. R. Wilson (Under-Secretary of Victoria), W. Curnow, A. Britton, Samuel Cook; Captain Charlton, of the Austral; Messrs. W. B. Mitchell; E. M. Deitrich, Commodore of Sydney Amateur Sailing Club; S. Macdonald, Commodore of the Double Bay Sailing Club; F. Bennett, secretary Prince Alfred Yacht Club; H. Harding, Commodore Sydney Amateur Canvas Dingy Club; Captain Trouton, Q. L. Deloitte, S. R. Traill, L. Beaton, E. F. Smith, P. C. Trebeck (S.A.S.C.), H. H. Lang, J. W. Ferguson, Frank King, J. Chisholm, W. Briggs, O. Bauer, R. J. Black, W. Tucker, and other members of the squadron. The Hon. W. J. Trickett and Dr. Milford sent apologies for their unavoidable absence.

After dinner the chairman gave the toasts of "The Queen," and "The Prince of Wales, the patron of the Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron."

The CHAIRMAN next proposed "The Army and Navy," and in speaking thereon said the yachting and boatsailing community of Sydney should show their sympathy with seafaring men in a practical way by taking steps to procure a site for the erection of a building like the Goodenough home sufficiently large to meet the necessities of this port. He recommended the suggestion to the consideration of men of wealth and all interested in maritime affairs.

Captain HOSKYNS responded, and observed that it would be a great advantage to the sailors of the Royal and mercantile marine to have such an institution as that suggested by Commodore Fairfax, where decent men could go, and where good examples would be held up before the younger men of the services.

Captain QUINN also responded, and feelingly acknowledged the hospitable and homely manner in which he and his brother officers had been received in Sydney.

Vice-Commodore MILSON then proposed "Our Guests."

Captain HIXSON replied, and wished the squadron every success in the new season for their own amusement, and that of those who looked on.

The Hon. GEO. THORNTON also responded. He went back over some old reminiscences of his early yachting days, associated with the names of Mr. James Milson and Mr. Alfred Fairfax. As far back as 1839 he had won the first prize for yachting in Sydney Harbour, but Mr. James Milson had been a yachtsman even before that time. He was not satisfied with the progress of yachting here since that period, considering all the very favourable circumstances surrounding it. In 1839 there were 17 first-class yachts competing for the prize, and though not as large as the Magic, or some of the other yachts now sailing, they were both fast and beautiful. Since then yachting had gone back, and had not attained the position it should hold here. But he hoped that it would go ahead, and that they would have here the nucleus of a navy in young men, who, like the men of the Soudan Expedition, would take part in the defence of the Empire. If they had 50 more yachtsmen like Mr. Alfred Fairfax, who was never satisfied with a second place, they would see what yachting could be. He mentioned, in passing, the old house which stands near the pavilion, as having been for many years the residence in early life of one of our great men—Sir John Robertson. Although the place was familiarly called Cremorne, it was properly Robertson's Point. Sir John's father lived there for many years, and Sir John himself, if not born there, spent his boyish years and a great deal of his time in that old house. Mr. Thornton then proposed "Success to the Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron, coupled with the name of the Commodore." The name of Fairfax was a household word in Australia, or at any rate in New South Wales, and was always mentioned with respect and as one that was to be looked to for help if they wanted it. He hoped that the name would continue to be proverbial as long as the colony should endure. He had been present on the first night the Sydney Morning Herald was published, in a place at the foot of Essex-street. No one could foresee then that that newspaper would become what it now was—one of the greatest public institutions of this country. He was proud to have been at the beginning of that undertaking, and to see its continuation to its present circumstances. The toast having been heartily honoured.

Commodore FAIRFAX responded. He called to recollection some of the old yacht races in which Mr. Milson and Mr. Thornton and Mr. Alfred Fairfax took part with the Champion, the Midge, the Susan, and the Friendship. Those races were more interesting than some of the modern contests. He hoped Mr. Thornton's observations on the decline of yachting would have a good effect. He thought that amongst the various boat-sailing clubs they might found a school which could produce the very best yachtsmen of the harbour. As to Mr. Thornton's remarks concerning a certain institution, he would only say that he was glad to hear it spoken of so kindly by one whom he esteemed so much. He pointed out the necessity for the construction of a dry dock or yacht-slip where boats could be got up and put in order in time for the season. This matter had been already mooted among yachting people, and should be taken into consideration by the two larger clubs at any rate, and he recommended it to the attention of the different clubs when they next met.

Mr. Alfred Fairfax also replied, in answer to calls, and endorsed all Mr. Thornton had said about the present condition of yachting in general. It was perfectly true that yachting had gone back during the last fifteen or twenty years. Every other sport and the colony itself had made great progress, but yachting had gone back, and even the open boats were passing them. He was absolutely unable to account for it. But there was one thing that had to do with it, and that was that during the last 20 years they had lost the influence of the ladies, which was a serious loss to any institution. They used to have squadron balls 20 years ago, which were most successful, but since the Duke of Edinburgh was here he did not remember one having been held. There was a favourable opportunity before them now, in the approaching arrival of the new Governor, who was a patron of sport, and they might give him a suitable reception as yachtsmen. They might also on that occasion get up an intercolonial match with the splendid yachts of Adelaide and Melbourne, who were quite ready to meet those of Sydney. He had already proposed to the committee the revival of the squadron ball. Those held in Victoria were the most successful of the season. They might produce a fête which would elicit the sympathy of the new Governor, and, with the influence of a Governor to back them up, it would have a beneficial effect on the future of the squadron. The demonstration on the opening of the season held in Brisbane, a week before, showed that the other colonies were going ahead in this matter. He wished to know the feeling of the company as to the holding of a squadron ball on the arrival of the Governor. (Applause.) Popularity was gained by patronage, and they might not have such another opportunity. They had not had a yachting Governor yet, and if they could get one, something would be done in the interests of yachting. (Applause.)

Mr. JAMES MILSON, in acknowledging the toast, remarked that his first match was won in January, 1837. In his yachting days they never had anything like the beauties which were anchored below. His "first love," the Sophia, was considered only a first-class sailing boat. Although now taking no active part in the sport, he would always raise his voice in praise and support of it. (Applause.)

The company, having spent their time very agreeably, then returned to the yachts. On moving out of the bay, the commodore signalled a rendezvous at Watson's Bay, and the fresh breeze ran the yachts quickly down on a couple of tacks. The sky clouded over, and the purplish smoky grey of the harbour made a hazy curtain on which the white sails stood out with a pretty effect. At Watson's Bay the yachts saluted the Commodore and then separated for their moorings. The wind fell as they went up the harbour, and was just strong enough to take them to their quarters, which were reached about 6 o'clock. The day passed very pleasantly, and the invigorating run down the harbour proved highly enjoyable.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BALLARAT (VIC.), SATURDAY.

The district mining reports are as under:—Lone Hand Company, Kingston.—Blocking out as usual; nothing new to report. The mine is looking well; will crush cement this week. The yield of gold for the past week has been 560 ounces. Lord Harry Company.—Water has been taken down 63 feet since starting; all the machinery and pumps are in good order, and working well.

New North Clunes Company, Clunes.—The north drive on No. 12 level has been connected with the drive from the bottom of the winze, and the lode has the appearance of continuing south from the point of intersection. A party will be started to drive on it at once. There is no change in any other part of the mine. The fortnight's yield of gold has been 193oz. 16dwt. from 390 tons of stone.

BRAIDWOOD, SATURDAY.

The gold escort left here on yesterday with 750oz. of gold, 630oz. of which came from Araluen.

MARYBOROUGH (VIC.), SATURDAY.

The yield of gold for the past five days from the Working Miners' Company's claim has been 176oz.

WAGGA WAGGA, SUNDAY.

The shaft on Egan's reef, Tarcutta, is now sunk to a depth of 100 feet, and during the week the drive along the course of the reef has been extended 10 feet, the lode widening from three inches to 8 or 10 inches in that distance. Very heavy mineral stone was struck yesterday, and the manager expects to reach the dip of the reef carrying the surface shoot of gold during next week.

MANAGERS' REPORTS.

Stannifer-Bischoff Tin-mining Company, Limited, 3rd October.—"Have sunk the main shaft a depth of 6 feet; total depth from surface, 150 feet. The lode has improved since last report, and shows a little tin on the footwall. It is a better indication than we got when we cut the junction. I will send you some samples of the country we are passing through."

Victoria Silver-mining Company, Limited, October 9.—The tunnel has been extended a further distance of 6 feet, making a total of 134 feet. Still passing through small quartz veins, now intermixed with calcite (carbonate of lime). No other change to report.

Old Quartz Hill, Chewton, October 9.—Western crosscut is driven a further distance of six feet for the week; total, twenty feet from shaft. Country sandstone and slate, with quartz leaders.

South-west Sunny Corner Silver-mining Company, Limited, October 3.—The tunnel has been extended a further distance of 10 feet during the week; no change to report. Present length of tunnel, 24 feet.

South Sunny Corner Silver-mining Company, Limited, October 3.—Owing to heavy rain of the previous week, sinking had to be suspended for a time to allow part of the shaft to be timbered that was giving way through surface drainage. This has now been completed, and sinking again started. During the week we have sunk 3½ feet, making total depth 37 feet. Formation of rock unchanged.

Turon Silver-mining Company, Limited, Sunny Corner, October 3.—During the week we have driven a further distance of 20 feet 6 inches, making a total of 33 feet 6 inches. The rock continues of same nature, still showing a little mundic. 28 feet from mouth of tunnel we cut a vein of gossan, with a great many very small veins of quartz showing. The reef is about 6 inches thick. We have also got a little water, which is often indicative of a lode.

New Reform Gold-mining Company, Limited, Lucknow, 9th October.—Stopes still upon good stone for crushing and concentration. Since last reporting have raised 100, crushed 120, and thrown out 10 tons; despatched 121 bags of concentrated ore. Byrnes has now the whole of the foundations completed and the air compresser in position. He will, all things being equal, complete his contract next week. Machinery in connection with the battery in good order. Water getting very scarce.

Union Gold-Mining Company, Limited, Dalmorton, Grafton, 3rd October.—Since my last I have succeeded in letting 30 feet driving on the Sir Hercules at £2 per foot. This is for 7 feet high, and contractors to tunnel. The same party have the contract for shaft, but have made very little progress during the past week, as the rock is very refractory, and they also had water to contend with. The distance sunk for the fortnight was 6 feet, and the reef is now 9 inches wide, with black slate along side full of arsenical pyrites, and a little galena in the reef. A marked improvement in size has therefore taken place, as at starting the reef was only three inches. I shall have the Lone Star ready for contractors to inspect early next week; but I am afraid there will be much difficulty in getting anyone to take it.

The hon. secretary of the Stock Exchange reports the crushing of the Band and Albion Consols for the past week to be 313 tons, yielding 129oz. gold.

THE DISESTABLISHMENT QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

(From the Times, August 7.)

Under the auspices of the Council of the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control a series of pamphlets, leaflets, circulars, &c., have been issued to the electors of the kingdom in view of the approaching general election. Already, it is remarked, has the Legislature passed a series of measures on the principle of religious equality. Roman Catholics and Jews have been admitted to Parliament, compulsory Church-rates have been abolished, Dissenters have now the benefit of the advantages to be enjoyed at the national Universities and, to some extent, in the ancient endowed schools. It is vain for either Liberal candidates or Liberal electors to think of evading this question of disestablishment, or to try to put it off indefinitely. It has to be resolutely faced and finally settled, and the Liberalism which refuses to deal with it is not worthy the name. In "A Word to the Electors on the Church Question" it is argued at some length that the people have a greater interest in the proper settlement of this than probably in any other matter of public interest. It is asked, ought we as a nation any longer to keep up an Established Church? By way of reply it is pointed out that while at present there was one Establishment in England and Wales and another in Scotland, there had existed, up to but a few years ago, one in Ireland as well. Mr. Gladstone, however, in his desire to do justice to the Irish people, put an end to the Irish Establishment. Justice required that the other Established Churches should also be abolished. In Wales the advocates of the Liberation Society say "the Established Church does not number more than about one in seven or eight of the population, but it includes most of the gentry. The great bulk of the people are Dissenters. . . . The Scotch Established Church is almost as bad. Less than a third of the people belong to it. . . . But the great point is as to the Established Church here in England. Is it just and right that it should any longer be maintained? The facts of the case supply the answer. The Church of England is established by law as the National Church; but it is not the Church of the English nation, for not half the nation belong to it. . . . No; the establishment of the Church does no good either to the Church or to the nation; it makes the Church worldly and careless, and hinders its work, while it prejudices people against religion itself by making it appear unjust. It divides and weakens the nation by setting against one another people who would otherwise work for the public good; it blocks the way of reform, and is therefore a hindrance to national improvement; and it absorbs an enormous amount of public property, probably not less than £6,000,000 a year." A leaflet entitled "What good will it do?" dealing with disestablishment, argues under various headings that it will confer the following benefits:—Put an end to a great injustice, give back to the nation a large amount of public property, relieve Parliament from the management of the affairs of the Church, remove one of the chief hindrances to social and political progress, place all Churches on an equality before the law, afford new life and energy to all religious bodies, and set the Church free to manage its own affairs, as well as put an end to some of the worst evils from which she suffers.

While the Liberationists have thus been propagating their views, their opponents have not been idle, but have issued a very similar sheaf of circulars from the office of the Banner newspaper in defence of the Establishment. The first of these leaflets asks, "What is the Established Church?" and describes it as the religious organisation by whose original and continuous working our fathers and we ourselves were brought to the knowledge of Gospel Truth; the Church, which speaks to poor and peasant alike the same words of comfort, counsel, and warning; the religious body which in early times struggled for and wrung from kings and princes liberties for the people; which in our own days has educated more of the children of the poor than all the other schools put together. Then comes the question, "What is meant by Disestablishment?" On this point the leaflet states the practical results that would follow, and asks the electors whether they are prepared to make this great sacrifice and suffer all this loss for the sake of gratifying the miscellaneous body of persons who oppose the Church. Many other plain questions are asked on this subject, and on the £ s. d. of disestablishment, as to which it is urged that from the lowest point of view no one can say positively that in time to come—say, 45 years hence—the nation will be a gainer by the transaction. Nearly all those leaflets are of a practical character, and appeal less to sentiment than to sense. It is in this spirit that such questions are answered as are likely to be asked of the new voters, for whom the series is chiefly written. "What about the labourer's compensation?" "What have the Liberationists done for you?" "How came the Church to be established?" "Does the State pay for the Church?"—all these are questions on which a few simple words are written without partisan violence. Considering the numbers of the new voters, it may be well to call attention to the democratic side of the Church, as to which, in "A labourer's question, What about my compensation?" Hodge reflects, "It was for us the churches were built; it was for us they were endowed; it was for us the parson was appointed minister of the parish; it was as our spiritual servant that he first received his income from tithes and other Church property—what are they going to give us instead of all the rights and privileges which they mean to take away."

THE ELECTORS OF CAMDEN.

Gentlemen,—Parliament having come to a termination, it will be your duty and privilege to elect two representatives, and I desire to announce myself as a candidate for your support. There will probably be much diversity of opinion as to the wisdom of dissolving Parliament, and as it is a matter which can better be discussed at meetings than in a newspaper address, I purpose therefore to pass it over till I meet you. There are no great questions before the country at present, and the work of the late Parliament, as well as that which is likely to engage the attention of the coming one, shall be fully spoken of at meetings which I purpose holding throughout your electorate.

I have published to my good friends in my late electorate my reasons for not again offering my services to them, and they are as follows:—That the time and money necessary to enable me to visit them as frequently as I conceive it to be a member's duty to do are not at my disposal.

I have now only to say to you that, at the wish of a large number of friends in various parts of your electorate, I have consented to become a candidate, that I will visit you at the various centres of population, giving you every opportunity of judging whether I am qualified to occupy the distinguished position of one of your representatives. My desire is to remain in Parliament. An earnest wish of mine is to have for constituents my oldest friends, and for an electorate my native place.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, Your obedient Servant,
HENRY S. BADGERY.
Sydney, October 8, 1885.

TO THE ELECTORS OF CAMDEN.

I beg to announce myself as a CANDIDATE for your suffrages at the forthcoming GENERAL ELECTION, and will address you at the various centres of the electorate at early dates.
Yours faithfully, JOHN KIDD.

TO THE ELECTORS OF CAMDEN.

Gentlemen,—In view of the immediate dissolution of Parliament, I beg to announce myself as again a candidate for your suffrages.

I will address you at the various centres throughout the Electorate at the earliest possible date.
Yours very faithfully, THOMAS GARRETT.

CAMDEN ELECTION.

MR. GARRETT will ADDRESS the ELECTORS as follows:—
BOWRAL. School of Arts, THIS EVENING, at half-past seven.
BERRIMA. Court House, TUESDAY AFTERNOON, at 3 o'clock.

THE ELECTORS OF CANTERBURY.

Gentlemen,—I have been invited by a large and influential number of residents in your electorate to allow myself to be nominated as one of your representatives at the ensuing General Election, and in relying upon the promises of support which I have received I have determined to place my services at your disposal, and I beg to say that I shall address you personally at as many places within the electorate as possible before the day of election, and at times of which notice will be given in future advertisements.

I have, as most of you are aware, always taken an active and prominent part in the agitation for the Extension of the Railway into the city, and I have freely spent both time and money in endeavouring to advance that object.

I am strongly impressed with the necessity for prompt provision being made to connect the suburbs with the Nepean Water Supply, and for an efficient system of drainage being devised and carried out with as little loss of time as possible.

I consider the Health Bill at present before the country as worthy of the most careful consideration, and I shall always be prepared to support every measure which has for its object the promotion of the welfare and advancement of the people.

I am, and always have been, a staunch Freetrader.

I deeply deplore the necessity which compelled the late Premier, Sir Alexander Stuart, to resign; and I feel that the retirement of Mr. Dalley is a serious public loss, for I hold that the late Administration deserved well of the country, and I believe that the new Parliament will be disposed to give the Ministry, as formed by Mr. Dibbs, a fair trial.

I have had nearly three years' Parliamentary experience for the Hume, therefore I shall not enter the House as a novice, and should you avail yourselves of my services I shall spare no exertion to give you satisfaction.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF THE GLEBE.

GENERAL ELECTION.

I hereby give NOTICE that a PUBLIC MEETING will be held at the Hustings, Town Hall, Glebe, on TUESDAY, the 13th October, 1885, at noon, for the Nomination and Election of TWO MEMBERS to serve in the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales for the Electoral District of the Glebe.

In the event of more than two members being nominated and a poll demanded, the polling will take place at the Town Hall, Glebe, and the Central Police Office, Sydney, on FRIDAY, the 16th October instant, commencing at 8 a.m. and closing at 4 p.m. on that day.

Forty Pounds, in cash, must be paid to the Returning-Officer before the nomination of any candidate.
WILLIAM CARY, Returning Officer.
Hereford-street, Glebe, 9th October, 1885.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE GLEBE.

Gentlemen,—In response to a call from many voters in this electorate, I beg to offer myself as a Candidate for your suffrages.

I cannot pretend to review fully the present political situation, but upon certain matters it is only right that I should express my opinions. The Land Act was the chief work of the late Government. It is based on sound principles, and deserves a fair trial. It will succeed, I hope, in securing the two main objects of sound land legislation, viz., the facilitation of the occupation of land by human beings, and the prevention of the aggregation of vast areas of land in the hands of a few.

I cordially sympathise with our system of public education, which secures to everyone an opportunity of qualifying himself for any position, however elevated, in the community to which he belongs. As a native of this colony, to which I owe so much, my opinions in this matter are very strong, and I should therefore favour every effort made to extend technical education.

In the next Parliament certain measures are to be presented to the House, in the carrying of which into law I shall use my best energies if you should return me as one of your representatives. At the present moment, when the population of the larger towns is increasing to such a surprising extent, while sanitary reform has been a thing more talked about than actively attempted, I ask, in all sincerity of purpose, an opportunity of supporting publicly any measure which has for its object the preservation of the public health and the amelioration of the conditions of the working classes. In the Glebe the working classes form a more than usually large section of the electors, and I know no place where the interests of the working classes seem to have been more completely lost to sight. The working man is exposed to nuisances of no ordinary kind, and it is a monstrous shame that these nuisances have been allowed to continue so long without any vigorous effort being made to remove them.

With respect to the question of free trade, which may possibly become a subject of discussion, I allow that in a young country industries capable of developing its resources deserve every encouragement. It is evident, of course, that no protective duties should be imposed upon any material or commodity, for the interest of any trade, at the expense of the community.

I am of opinion that the present Licensing Act, as it stands, should receive a fair trial, but I should strongly support any measure introduced for the purpose of protecting the working classes from the adulteration of liquors.

Assisted immigration, in spite of many flagrant abuses, has done much for the colony; but in the future any expenditure of public money for this purpose must be more judiciously controlled than heretofore.

I hope that these opinions will enable you to decide whether I am likely to be useful to you and the community in the Parliament of my native country.

I am, gentlemen, Your humble servant,
W. CAMAC WILKINSON, M.D. (Lond.).

TO THE ELECTORS OF MUDGEE.

Gentlemen,—Parliament is dissolved, and viewing the peculiarities of the political situation I feel it to be my imperative duty, at whatever inconvenience and at whatever sacrifice, to offer you my services once more.

When I first addressed you, more than 30 years ago, I said that if elected I would to the best of my ability assist to "guard and advance the rights and liberties and the general welfare of the people of this colony." You elected me, and from that time to this have never rejected me. I have done my duty, and have no fear of your now refusing me a renewal of your confidence.

Fortunately, until the existence of the last Parliament, there was little or no necessity to guard rights once created, because no Parliament had been hardy enough, or unfaithful enough, to assail them.

The Liberal party had meanwhile, during much struggling, practically established the principles of vote by ballot, manhood suffrage, equal electoral districts, and had swept away the old outrageous Masters and Servants Act, and had obtained the principle that when selling our country lands the man who covenanted to reside on it and improve it, and thus specially aid in the development of the resources of the colony, should select a suitable site for his operations from what was available, including all the land that might be let or relet for pastoral purposes after January, 1862. He was permitted to take possession on paying 5s per acre, without competition and without delay (even for survey), with preference over all other purchasers, and on the easiest terms of credit for the balance commensurate with the fair rights of the public. On the other hand those who purchased, covenanting to give money and nothing but money for their land, could purchase only such as the Government offered for sale, subject to competition in the open mart, and with a minimum cash price of one pound sterling per acre; these provisions obtaining in the interests of the whole people, that on every alienation of land the rights of the public Treasury should be protected.

Towards the close of the year 1882 that portion of the pastoral tenants that Mr. Robert Lowe, when in our Legislative Council, designated "cormorant squatters" and their followers, having, without the observation or suspicion of the public, got into the Legislative Assembly in great numbers on such sham cries as the abolition of the free selectors' interest, &c., appeared to think it a good opportunity to obtain a majority against the Government. The policy of the movement was "all things to all men." Whisperings and promises went secretly round, so as to catch the votes of members on grounds the most antagonistic. Each approachable member was told that which would best suit the peculiarity of his position. They succeeded in putting the Ministry into a minority, and Parliament was dissolved.

The cormorants got at the press—for the most part at any rate—and scandalously deceived the country as to the great axe of their own which they intended to grind, under cover of the sham cries I have alluded to. Trying to check this torrent of wrong, I, on the 24th November, 1882, issued an address to you, which was published in every newspaper in the colony. The following are extracts from it:—

* * * * * * *

"It was not denied by my opponents that the bill was well and ably prepared; but as it did not provide for giving the squatters new powers and privileges at the expense of the rest of the community, it was rejected at the second reading. The duty of immediate and important action was then cast upon the Government of Sir Henry Parkes.

"We could resign our offices, relieve ourselves from trouble and responsibility, and leave the rights of the people at the mercy of gentlemen the leading objects of whom are retrogressive in the extreme; or, we could advise his Excellency the Governor to dissolve Parliament. You are doubtless already aware that we took the latter course, and that his Excellency accepted our advice.

"Thus, all that has been won for the people by their representatives during the period of responsible government, and now in jeopardy, is faithfully remitted, without tamper or restriction, to you and to the other electors of the country!"

* * * * * * *

"They condemn certain abuses which have arisen under the present law, yet for the lands they would leave open to free selection they propose nothing preventive that is not in the rejected bill; but, as Mr. Stuart puts it, his opposition is to what he calls 'unrestricted free selection.'

"The great body of the squatters have ever viewed with jealous greed the undoubted right of the people to select for themselves land upon which to expend their labour. In 1861 an arguable proposition in favour of classification of land, and restriction of selectors from all but so-called 'agricultural areas,' was submitted to the constituencies and rejected, with a unanimity which never occurred before or since in this country, and the present thoroughgoing right of choice was enforced. It has been maintained by the people at the ballot-boxes at every general election from that time to this.

"But if the people have hitherto declined to listen to any such proposition as that proposed by my opponents in 1861 in favour of the squatters, what shall be said of the present rule of thumb proposal to shut out from them one-half of every run in the colony without discrimination or classification?

"It is simply to take from the people the rights of selection which they now possess and to hand over holus bolus exclusively to the squatters all the lands, approaching 100,000,000 acres, with regard to which the new theorists desire to make a change.

"The flimsy reason put forward to justify this extraordinary proposition is that there have been quarrellings, &c., between squatters and free selectors, as if the history of contention for the possession of land is not coeval with that of man. A notable mode of conciliation our present opponents would take. It would be first to strengthen the squatters in the so-called strife, they being already too strong for the selectors and the would-be selectors; and then, when the squatters are safely lodged on one-half of their immense holdings of public lands, leave them with all the powers it is alleged they have so much abused to work the selectors and would-be selectors out of the other half.

"It has been suggested that the change would give more rent from the squatter for that portion of his run which it is proposed to shut out from settlement, but no other means of fixing rent has been suggested than that fixed by my Bill. Increased rent is not what the squatters mean. The promise given by my opponents, and rejected by me, of compensation for the resumption of leased lands doubtless gave the great preponderance of fifteen to six of the squatters in the Assembly to the opponents of the Government. All honour to the minority; it proves, if proof were necessary, that there are squatters who care more for the country than for their own pockets.

"Compensations have already become odious to the public. This locking up the land hitherto open, and compensation from the Crown for reopening it, will, if permitted, call forth such shoals of demands upon our Treasury as will more than swamp all our income from Crown lands.

* * * * * * *

"Restriction of selection by the people, and long leases up to 20 years, with fixity of tenure, is put forward by our opponents at a time of progress when successful efforts everywhere abound for the discovery of water in abundance in vast and fertile districts hitherto waterless; and put forward notwithstanding the fact that many large towns have been established and tens of thousands of people prosperously settled on the land which the dissolution of Parliament of 1861 resulted in preventing from being closed from selection.

"Advantages have abounded in every walk of life under the present law. The workman who depends on the labour of his hands is better paid. Our colony stands pre-eminent among the Australias—our pastoral, agricultural, and all other interests are more prosperous than ever they were—and such of our people as desire to possess land to make homes for themselves are not restricted in their choice as the opponents of the Government would restrict them.

"During 20 years and more some selectors—very many—have sold their land, and that is put forward as a reason for restricting all others in their wish to become selectors. I do not know whether the electors desire that kind of thing, but I will give it my most determined and uncompromising opposition. So far as I am concerned, I know I shall not be charged by any fair man with ever willingly doing an injustice in my public position to either squatter, free selector, or to the public whose land I administer, and I will continue to do, so long as I have power, what I believe to be right and within the law, without regard to consequences."

However, the cormorants came back to Parliament with a majority, and after thirteen months' struggling with a minority who thought with me, and who pointed out all the faults and rascality that have already cropped up under the new law, and more, as "Hansard" will show, they passed a land law after their own hearts.

It provides that about one-third of our whole territory, being that in the West, shall be preserved for large holders; no selector may go there!

It provides that one-half of every run in the remainder of our colony shall also be kept clear of free selectors, the whole having been under the old law open to them.

It provides that any selection—and they can reach 2560 acres—must be fenced, and that no other improvement will be allowed for; so that a bona-fide settler who goes on the land with his family must fence it in before he erects a house to cover them; these provisions clearly showing that all that is intended is to make the so-called free selection suitable for a squatter's dummy, and that a farmer's improvements are treated as not worth consideration, and they are not considered in making a sale to him. Half-a-million of acres are being alienated to individuals monthly, on a principle of payment that will take more than four years to recoup the survey charges for the same. Mr. Dibbs will, I fear, find these terms of alienation of our public lands anything but beneficial financially; indeed, that so far as our land operations, springing from the Act of 1884, are alone concerned, the cost will be more than the income.

Then, again, the new mode of providing only one appraisement of a run during 15 years will be found very unprofitable, as compared with the old mode of appraisement every five years. Almost every time a reappraisement has taken place for many years, the rent has been largely increased; but now, in a period of almost unexampled depression, one appraisement made under such adverse circumstances is considered sufficient for some 15 years.

The bunglings that have occurred in not bringing the law into operation for many months after the time intended, and in dividing the runs by the rule of thumb, are the laughing-stock of the neighbouring colonies, and are such as have never occurred before in Australasia.

It is difficult, however, to know what to do in the almost inexplicable confusion. Engagements have been made between our Government and individuals involving enormous considerations. I should be sorry if we followed the example of Victoria, and repudiated any State engagement. The subject must be honestly and fairly grappled with. I hoped to have been present at the opening of Parliament, and that such opening had been months earlier, when I would have made one more effort to stay the disastrous waste of public property that has occurred and is occurring, whilst the cry goes forth, "Give the law a fair trial."

Half a million of acres have gone each month, and half a million of acres are each month going into private hands for half nothing, yet the idiotic cry prevails, "Give the law a fair trial."

In the midst of all this the two Ministers who were the most active in favour of, and most responsible for the new land law, have quietly taken themselves off to the nominated Chamber, and thus got clear of the claws of their constituents, while the new Minister for Lands practically promises that there shall be no more jobbery or corruption in the department over which he is to rule.

I have alluded sufficiently to the retrograde action of the Government with regard to the land question. But not satisfied with their iniquitous designs on that matter, they have made it apparent that the people's cherished rights would soon all be gone if their party remained in office. As a proof of this they got up what they called a Convention, placed three of our Ministers in it, who joined themselves with so-called delegates from the other colonies, and behind the back of the people and the press, drew up a bill which they called the Federal Enabling Bill, which was to enable the federation of the colonies by the mother-country, and their being placed under the control of some dozen federal councillors, these councillors having the power to snatch from us one-half the rights and liberties which we obtained through the efforts of the enlightened men who drew our Constitution Act, and to overbear to a like extent the liberties which the people have gained since we obtained responsible government. This precious bill would have placed us under the control of the enlightened representatives of Fiji and Western Australia, and the disinterested Governments of Victoria, &c., &c.

Our Government, at that time led by Mr. Dibbs, actually had the audacity practically to move the adoption of this bill by our Parliament. The first stage of their action was to move that the House go into committee to consider the bill, upon which, I moved and carried the previous question, which was equivalent to saying: "We won't even consider it," and we heard no more of it until the Governor's speech of the other day, when it transpired that our much respected Governor had had put into his mouth by his injudicious advisers to say the following insulting words to our Parliament:—

"With the conviction that the Federal Council Bill, recently passed by the Imperial Legislature, would not have proved, in the form in which it was submitted, acceptable to the people of this colony, my advisers did not join in supporting that measure. The nature of the amendments which, to secure co-operation, it would have been necessary to make in the bill, were communicated to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Had the suggestions proposed by my advisers been accepted, a compromise might have been effected, by means of which both this colony and that of New Zealand might have been included in the Council."

I should like to know who authorised our Ministers to make any suggestion or take any action which could possibly, with ordinary decency, on any terms, include this colony in the Federal Enabling Bill, when they knew that the only time that it came before our Parliament it was refused consideration even!

Unless the people look to it, we shall have Government alone by the Executive Council, and the chamber of their representatives will become as nothing. Indeed, a new power seems likely to smother all, including the Governor and all the Ministers but the Premier. A council of premiers has been established, and our Ministers chose Mr. Service as "boss" Federal Enabling Premier, and he, nothing loath, issues his mandates from "the Premier's office, Melbourne," practically for and on behalf of Australasia. It is thus that the Imperial Parliament were humbugged into believing that the colonies wanted the Federal Enabling Bill.

The idea of any such authority existing amongst the Premiers without the Cabinet and without the sanction of Parliament must be put down.

Ministers boast of having passed a great number of laws; it would be better if they could point to one that is workable. The fact is they have put their hands pretty well on everything, and left each worse and more difficult to deal with than it was before they touched it.

Two points for consideration have lately been revived. Payment of members, and protection. I confess that I have always been in favour of payment of members, and have often voted for it; but I never thought it of sufficient importance to justify the breaking up of a party, nor do I think so now.

As to protection, I believe I am the most thorough-going protectionist, properly understood, that has ever been in our Parliament, because I would protect every man in his right to engage in that honest industry that will bring him the most means, with perfect right to expend his money in the way that will bring to his household the greatest amount of comfort, without attempting to restrict him as to from whom he shall purchase. Hence I am a free trader.

I think it will be admitted that up to the period of my recent accident I have attended pretty well to your local wants. I supported the Government in their proposition to carry a railway line to Coonamble from Mudgee, via Gulgong. The main railway line via Colo Creek has not yet been ripe for Parliamentary discussion. Both lines have always had my warm support, and shall continue to have it.

Your faithful servant,
JOHN ROBERTSON.

P.S.—I shall visit your electorate before the day of nomination. Due notice will be given of my movements.

Local Committee.

TO THE ELECTORS OF PADDINGTON.

Gentlemen,—In compliance with the request of a requisition, bearing 1320 signatures, I beg to announce myself a Candidate for this Electorate.

Third on the poll at the last election, I ask at least as good a position in the present contest, when you are called on to return THREE instead of two representatives.

During the past three years I have earnestly sought to promote the interests of the electorate, particularly in successfully opposing the wrongful and injurious College-street tramway project of the Government; in connection with the movement against the unjust increase in Tram-fares and by my efforts to secure public baths and recreation grounds for the inhabitants.

As regards general politics, I may remind you of the prominent part taken by me in opposing the extraordinary and ruinous TAXATION proposals of the Government—proposals not only obnoxious, but absolutely unnecessary, as proved by the fact that their withdrawal entailed neither injury nor inconvenience upon the country.

In the movement to limit the exercise of arbitrary power by the legal tribunals, I took an active part, as also in connection with the efforts made to secure improvement in the water supply of the metropolitan area.

My labours in the cause of local self-government are well known. I was, and am, a foremost advocate of what is at length becoming generally recognised as a social and political necessity.

As an Alderman of 10 years' standing, as a member of the Council of the Health Society, and in other ways, I have proved the earnestness of my desire to further the enactment of a sound measure to conserve the public health.

My writings on the Land question will have informed you that I deem the new Land Act requires serious amendment in the interests of the whole community.

In my opinion the Licensing question would be most satisfactorily dealt with by extending the principle of popular franchise, with compensation for the closing of houses deemed unnecessary.

The Civil Service Act requires considerable amendment. The position of the large number of officials on the temporary staff demands amelioration.

I am a Freetrader, but should a change in our Customs tariff, for the purposes of revenue, become necessary, I would support the imposition of duties upon articles capable of local production.

I am a supporter of the Public Schools Act and the eight-hour movement, and an advocate for suburban railways.

I regard the occupancy of office by Government contractors as thoroughly undesirable.

Trusting to receive your hearty support,
I am, Gentlemen,
Faithfully yours,
JNO. C. NEILD.

TO THE ELECTORS OF PADDINGTON.

Gentlemen,—After the earnest solicitations I have received at the hands of a large and influential body of the electors to allow myself to be placed in nomination as one of the Candidates for a seat in the forthcoming Parliament, I feel I would be wanting in a sense of duty did I not respond to so generously expressed a wish. I am a native of Paddington, and have always taken an active interest in every movement that has had for its object the advancement of the electorate. I have attentively watched the political current, and made myself conversant with the several questions which have from time to time engaged the attention of Parliament, and should my aspiration to serve you be realised, I can without egotism say that you will return a representative who is not unacquainted with your wants, but one who has interests and aims in common with yourselves. I am a free trader, but am also in favour of legitimate encouragement and patronage to colonial industries. I am not in favour of any alteration in the Education Act, further than that I should like to see all fees abolished. I am decidedly opposed to payment of members. I am one of those who would give the Land Act a fair trial, and shall advocate an absentee tax. I am not in favour of any extension of the present system of local option, except with adequate compensation; nor would I be a party to the extension of the present limits of the immigration scheme, believing that, with the increased facilities now afforded by private enterprise for reaching the colonies, assisted immigration will shortly be unnecessary. I am a staunch supporter of the extension of the railway into the city, and would strongly urge the necessity of a railway to the eastern suburbs. I am in favour of a Local Government Bill and a Health Bill; and from my long acquaintance with the working of municipal institutions, I believe I am competent to give useful assistance in dealing with measures of municipal and sanitary reform. I am not unmindful of the responsibilities of the position I seek at your hands; and, should you elect me to represent you, I can faithfully assure you nothing shall be wanting on my part to uphold the honour and dignity of the position. If elected, I shall give a fearless and straightforward vote upon all questions, and do everything within my power to advance the social and material progress of our colony. I cannot, within the limits of an address of this character, deal with the numerous subjects that will engage the attention of your representatives, but shall, at the various meetings notified hereunder express more fully my views upon the public questions of the day.

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES HELLMRICH.

THE GENERAL ELECTION.

NEW SOUTH WALES LOCAL OPTION LEAGUE.

OPINIONS OF EMINENT MEN
on
LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND FULL LOCAL OPTION.

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK: "Where then, are we to look for the proper authority to decide whether there shall be public-houses or not? I give you the answer which is in accordance with all modern legislation and with the feelings of the people in every part of the empire; I give you the answer that the people want to control it themselves."

CARDINAL MANNING: "I think that to take a popular local vote on this subject is the most reasonable of all things, for who know the needs, and the wants, and the evils, and the miseries of their own locality, as well as the people who live in it? At all events I would say, do not force public-houses upon any population till you know whether they wish for them or not. That, at least, is reasonable; but you never ask us. What I claim is that if the rich man has, by right of property, the power to put away this pestilence from his door, the poor man shall have, by power of law, the right to do the same."

Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE: "A Government should so legislate as to make it easy to do right and difficult to do wrong."—Speech at Buckley. "Certainly I shall not think it compatible with my duty to oppose any such plan as the Permissive Bill, on fiscal grounds. I should myself urge that fiscal grounds, whether they be important or not, must necessarily be secondary to that question. . . . It ought to be decided on entirely social and moral grounds." . . . In the debate on Sir Wilfrid Lawson's Resolution, 27th April, 1883, he said: "He himself had never yet voted for this motion, but he would vote that night in its favour. He had voted on a former occasion against the motion of the hon. member for Carlisle, not because he was opposed to the principle of it, but because he was not then prepared with a plan for carrying out what was an abstract resolution. . . . He had always claimed to be an advocate of the principle of Local Option. . . . It was an essential part of Local Government."

Resolution carried 27th April, 1883—Ayes, 264; Noes, 177. Majority in favour of full Local Option, 87.

Sir WM. V. HARCOURT, Home Secretary, on 8th May, 1884, said to a deputation: "That is our principle—absolute and complete Local Option. My principles are the principles of Local Option, which is not drastic at all, but rather the reverse. Local Option would simply allow people to do in this matter what they like. I have told you already that my view of Local Option includes an absolute and unrestricted power to the extent of absolute prohibition or partial prohibition, or no prohibition at all if they so desire."

Sir WILFRID LAWSON, Bart.: "I am not fond of prophesying, but I feel so sure of my ground now that I will prophesy—and let them take it to heart if they have ears to hear—the Liberal party will never again go back to power until they break with the publicans and take up with the temperance party. . . . Some people say they would much rather this drink question was settled by persuasion, by lecturing, and by appeals to people's reason. So would I if it could be done. They say they don't like law; nor do I. So long as knaves prey on fools, we must have law to restrain the knaves and protect the fools."—Speech in 1875.

RICHARD COBDEN: "Every day's experience tends more and more to confirm me in my opinion that the Temperance cause lies at the foundation of all social and political reform."

Professor HUXLEY: "Since I have walked through your great town of Liverpool I have seen fully as many savages, and as degraded savages, as in Australia—nay worse. I declare it has been shocking to me walking through your streets, to see unwashed and unkempt brutalised people side by side with the greatest refinement and greatest luxury. . . . Talk of political questions! . . . The man who can see, I think, will observe that in these times there lies beneath all these questions the great question whether that profligate misery which dogs the footsteps of modern civilisation should be allowed to exist. . . . I say I believe that it is the great political question of the future. If you could only see the right way of doing it, I could see no nobler work than to go with you in that object."

Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.: "It seems to me perfectly plain, then, that the claim of Local Option is based upon principles which ought to be truisms in a free country. It is based upon the principle that the profit of the few ought not to be increased by the peril of the many. It is based upon the principle that there cannot be, and ought not to be, any vested interest in anything which imperils the happiness of the people. It is based upon the principle that no selfishness is so intense as that of monopolists, who strain every nerve to suport privileges which are the bane of the multitude; and it is above all based upon the plain common sense principle that every nation has an absolute right to have a voice in and to claim the control of a traffic, which most materially affects its own interest for good or evil. Those then, gentlemen, are the principles—the plain broad principles of justice and common sense—on which the plea for Local Option is based. If there be any man in England who can deny that the abuse of drink is the great curse of English life, and that wherever the sale of drink is unrestricted there you will have the abuse of drink, I think that man must either be very obstinate or ignorant. The evidence which proves these facts is evidence drawn from every class of the community and every single sphere of our social life. You will find the evidence is overwhelming in publications so different as Parliamentary bluebooks, Convocation reports, statistical inquiries, national returns, and in those records we are so horrified to see, of our police courts, in the newspapers every day."

EDWARD J. H. KNAPP,
Hon. Secretary
Central Committee N. S. W. Local Option League.

CONTINENTAL GOSSIP.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT "STELLA.")

PARIS, AUG. 15.

This day, being the great "Festival of the Virgin," is still a marked "high tide" in France, though shorn of its glories as the national holiday since the fall of the Second Empire. The usual well-dressed and well-conducted crowds of Paris are strolling through the streets, excursion trains have taken enormous numbers of pleasure-seekers to the northern and western coasts, and the flower dealers have done a smart stroke of business in the sale of white flowers for offering on the altars of the favourite figure of Roman Catholic devotion.

All who can manage to get away are gone or going. The Alps are, as usual, in great request, and several lives have already been lost by the foolhardiness of the invaders of difficult summits and the blind fury of Alpine storms.

M. Ferry, like the other Frenchmen who aspire to a seat in the Chamber, is busy among the electors, but his attempts to regain the favour of voters have broken down conspicuously. At Lyons and other towns, where he expected to hold forth in defence of his conduct of public affairs and his desire to get the reigns of power again into his own hands, he has been unable to obtain a hearing, being assailed with cries of "Down with Ferry!" "Down with the Tonquinese!" "Down with the man of Madagas-car!"

The man whose fatuity has cost France so dear in men and money has, in fact, been baited something in the style of the baiting inflicted on the bulls at the great bull-fight which took place in the old Roman arena of Nismes, now re-built and restored to its former splendour. This importation of one of the worst features of social life in Spain had been got up with extraordinary completeness and magnificence, as a bold bid for the conquest of the French public by the toreadores, picadores, and badilleristas of the Iberian Peninsula. Eight superb bulls, 12 horses, four of the first "swords" of the Spanish bullring, and an army of subalterns recruited from the most brilliant performers in the minor roles of the favourite Spanish pastime, had drawn some hundreds of thousands of spectators from all parts of France to fill the ranges of seats in the immense arena, each of the lower rounds of which offer seats for 10,000 lookers-on. And the vast building was crowded in every part, and masses of people, unable to obtain an entrance, formed a solid pack outside the building. The Prefect and his family occupied the seats of honour; the vast concourse of people, dressed in the highest style of French fashion, or wearing the picturesque costumes of the south, presented a spectacle equally brilliant and striking. The arena itself was superbly ornamented. The ceremonial of the opening was a splendid scene not soon to be forgotten; but when the affair was brought to the practical point, when the horses, gored and bleeding, tore in agony round the arena, dragging their entrails along the ground, which speedily became a lake of blood and mangled flesh—when the bulls had killed off a number of their tormentors, and were killed in their turn—and when one of the four leading toreadores of Spain had been impaled on the two horns of a splendid four-footed devil that had the bad taste not to be willing to allow himself to be done to death by the renowned "sword," who did him the honor of trying to kill him, a good many people began to turn faint with horror and disgust, and quitted the "gay and festive scene" with, let us hope, the firm determination never again to let themselves be drawn into lending the countenance of their presence to a hideous butchery that leaves the doings of lions and tigers a good way above them in point of picturesqueness, as well as of gentleness. But, though many rushed out of the sanguinary and sickening pandemonium (the Prefect and his family being among the first to beat a hasty retreat), truth compels the reluctant admission that the greater part of that immense crowd yelled, shouted, and applauded, carried away by the diabolical excitement of the scene—a proof, if any were wanted, of the unwisdom of permitting such an appeal to the low and brutal instincts latent in so many bosoms! The rapid increase of crimes against the person observable of late years in this country would seem to be the natural outcome of the lust of ferocity that applauded so frantically, with a sort of intoxication of blood and pain, the hideous devilries of the "great bull fight" in the Nismes arena on Sunday last.

In curious contrast with this gross brutality are the musico-aerial fancies of the Royal fool who leaves to his Ministers the onus of ruling over beer-swigging Bavaria, and who has just added to his feats of artistic selfishness by writing to the manager of the diva, Miss Mary Anderson, asking the terms on which she would consent to play "Pygmalion and Galatea" in his theatre, for a short season, for his sole benefit, his Royal self to be the only spectator.

The belief that this music-mad dreamer is really insane is gaining ground among his subjects. His brother is admittedly of weak intellect; in fact, almost an idiot; were he of another type he would doubtless be placed on the throne; as it is he is impracticable. A cousin of the king, married to a sister of the King of Spain, may possibly be the successor of the extravagant dotard now ruling the Bavarian exchequer by his senseless throwing away of millions in giving outward form to dreams of the nebulous and heroic ages, made still more fabulous by Wagner's resuscitations of the same. The young archduchess has just electrified the Bavarian court by appearing in one of the most elegant toilettes ever concocted in the millinery laboratory of the renowned clothes-artist, Worth. The train and corsage of this wonderful piece of feminine finery are of satin, of a new and exquisite shade of green. The skirt has side-panels of white satin, embroidered by hand with lilies of the valley, the stems and foliage of the flowers being in shaded green silks, and the blossoms formed of pearl beads. The front of the skirt is of white lace, embroidered with seed pearl, very gracefully draped and intermingled with pearl fringes. The corsage is ornamented with a vest and revers of embroidered white satin, matching the side-panels of the skirt.

On considering the unparalleled extravagance of the feminine toilet at this time, when the misery of the working classes is so great and general, owing to the folly of strikes and the slackness of industry and trade, one can hardly wonder at the increasing violence of the Nihilist and other cognate parties, exasperated by the knowledge of the depth and extent of the gulf of separation between the "having" and "being" of the rich and the poor in the various lands that call themselves "Christian."

The husband of the wearer of the splendid dress described above, Prince Louis Frederic of Bavaria, offers a striking contrast to the king of that little country and his "daft" brother. He has studied medicine and surgery, and gained his diploma at the Medical School of Munich; has a passion for surgery, in which he is becoming noted for his skill and devotion; and has been rendering great services of late in the Nymphembourg Hospital, where he is one of the most assiduous practitioners.

A brother of the Empress of Austria is also signalising himself as an oculist, and bids fair, it is said, to take his place among the most eminent eye-doctors of the day.

Meantime, a Frenchman, M. Boisseau du Rocher, has invented an instrument which investigates and photographs all the most secret recesses of that principal laboratory of good and evil, the human stomach, and is also susceptible of application to the other organs of the body. The "megaloscope" of M. du Rocher consists of a probe, 50 centimetres long and seven millimetres broad, which he sends down into the stomach or whatever organ he wishes to examine. At the end of the probe is a very tiny lantern, containing a minute electric lamp. The cavity of the organ is lighted up by this lamp, while a prism, and two convex lenses arranged above it, reduce to microscopic dimensions the image of the walls of the organ for a distance of 8 inches on each side. At the upper extremity of the probe is fixed a glass with objective and eye-piece of the necessary magnifying power, whereby the microscopic likeness is enlarged, so that the mucous membrane and its lesions can be examined as though under a magnifying glass. By arranging a photographic apparatus to the eye-piece, a proof of the interior of the stomach can be obtained. In short, with the aid of the megaloscope, the interior of an organ can be viewed and examined as though held in the hand, and daily photographs of the same can be taken and compared. The medical world is naturally excited over this curious invention, the idea of which has long been floating vaguely in the minds of many members of the medical profession, though without having been brought to a practical outcome. It is hoped that the megaloscope may become a valuable assistant both to the surgeon and the physician.

The latest news from Lyons is to the effect that a workman, having cried "Vive Ferry!" in the streets, was attacked and fired at by the exasperated populace that had been hooting the late Premier, and crying "Down with every name that his mischievous adventures have caused to become odious to the public nostrils!" The foolish fellow, who probably thought it droll to cry up what all about him were crying down, was removed to the hospital, where he is now lying in a precarious state.

An incident that has just occurred at a banquet after an agricultural show, at Bourgtheroulde, in the Eure, is but one of the many curious signs of the unsettled state of public opinion in France, where the present form of government represents the preferences of only a small minority, but nevertheless maintains itself, and will probably continue to do so through the subdivision of parties among its enemies. The Prefect of the Department, invited by the municipality, rose at the dessert to propose a toast to the Chief of the State; but at his first words he was interrupted with cries of "Down with the Republic!" "Down with the Tonquinese!" The row became so violent that the Mayor had to interfere, and broke up the party.

The fraternity of the human race might be declared non-existent were it not, in the first place, that, as we know, there are no quarrels so violent as those between brothers; and, in the next place, that this same "blood relationship," so sanguinary in point of fact, is victoriously demonstrated to be a reality by statistics. Taking only eight centuries into the account, one's direct ancestors count up to a number that people would scarcely suppose beforehand. Taking three generations to each century, one has father and mother, 2; grand-parents, 4; great-grand-parents, 8. At the end of the second century, each one of us has 64 ancestors. Following up the same calculation, it is seen that at the end of ten centuries each human being has no fewer than 16,000,000 ancestors. And if we push the same calculation to the dim beginning of the human family on this planet, which the most careful examination of existing data places at an indefinite number of tens of thousands of years, we begin to see that the declaration, "All ye are brethren," is strictly and literally true.

Perhaps, after some more decades of thousands of years, the people of this country may come to feel somewhat more fraternally towards their "brethren" across the channel. The stories that have filled the French papers, for some months past, of the wickedness, follies, and hatred of France that are described as filling the English mind and life, would form an amusing romance, were it not so sad to witness this industrious stirring up of international strife. The latest of these romances tells how the daughter of a British officer fell ill suddenly and died two days before her wedding-day. Not to miss the ceremony and lose the preparations made for the same, the coffin was carried to the church, the marriage ceremony celebrated by "the Reverend D. P.," assisted by several other pasteurs, and in presence of the invited guests, in gala costume. After which, the officiating pasteurs changed their robes, read the burial service, and conducted the bier to the cemetery! The paragraph ends thus:—"We may ask how such things can be, and how clergymen could lend themselves to such a farce? But, after all, the facts related passed in England, and we know that the English are capable of anything."

HANS BERTRAM, the BLIND MUSICIAN of ADELAIDE.

Adelaide is generally accredited with being a musical city. Organ recitals and concerts are of constant occurrence, and now that a professorship of music has been established owing to the efforts of a very musical Governor, who has succeeded at any rate in making the divine art fashionable, it perhaps deserves some measure of the title. One of the most talented musicians in Adelaide is Hans Bertram, a young man scarce 23 years of age, who has been totally blind since his thirteenth year. He is the only surviving son of a merchant of Brunswick, in which town he was born. He commenced the study of music at the age of seven, and four years later became a pupil of Herr Winckler, with whom he remained for several years, and under whom he studied the principles of harmony, counter-point, and thorough-bass, and acquired considerable skill as a performer on the piano and organ. It was at this time that the unskilfulness of an oculist condemned him to perpetual blindness. Instead, however, of being daunted by his affliction, the young musician appears to have been stimulated to fresh exertion. He first appeared in public as a pianist when 11 years of age, and the following year commenced his career as a composer. At the age of 16 he passed his examination with credit at the Berlin Conservatory, and about the same time acted as organist at St. Peter's Church, Brunswick, in lieu of Herr Rebelling, who was absent for about a year. In 1881 Herr Bertram gave a farewell concert in his native city, and arrived in Adelaide the following year with his mother, who has since died. Herr Bertram has been very prolific as a composer, and may one day, perhaps, rise to be styled the Schubert of Australia. He has composed no fewer than 36 sonatas, about half of which are for the organ; 14 nocturnes and romances, of which many are very beautiful, besides a number of songs, of which several have been sung in public. A very good specimen of his style of composition has just been published. It is a descriptive song, called "The wind in the trees." The words are by Miss Holden, the daughter of one of the oldest journalists in Australia, who has been connected with the S. A. Register for a great number of years. The words are excellent, and are worthy to have inspired the music, which is saying a good deal. After an introductory andante, a description is given of the wind sighing among the trees and whispering love to the branches. The first verse, with its arpeggio accompaniment, is in E flat, but with a change of mood comes a change of key; the second verse, in which the wind is supposed to be uttering "cries of vengeance, words of passion," being in G flat, preceded by a brief passage con fuoco. The accompaniment increases in difficulty, till the third and last verse is reached, when the passions and tumult of the preceding verse are exchanged for a hymnlike adagio in A flat, faithfully reflecting the spirit of the following beautiful words:—

"Deeply sobbing, sadly wailing, moans the wind among the trees;
Weeps with sorrow, sobs with anguish, as it blows across the leas;
Like a sinner in contrition, mourning for his follies past.
And the waving trees make answer, 'Hush, thou shalt find peace at last.'"

The last verse, like the others, is preceded by a brief introductory prelude, which in this case consists of a sort of monody on the dominant of the new key in grave time. Much of the beauty of the song consists in the masterly manner in which the composer has pourtrayed the different passions by repetitions of the same, or nearly the same, musical idea, couched in different keys with varying accompaniments, and in varying tempi, from grave to allegro. The song has been sung in Adelaide, where it met with great success; and if any vocalist here wishes to distinguish herself by singing a song that is at once beautiful, chaste, and perfectly new, we can confidently recommend this latest composition of the blind organist of Adelaide. Although Herr Bertram only professes to play the piano and organ, he is also more or less at home with violin, flute, concertina, or double-bass; and, in default of an instrument, would whistle an accompaniment, which the singer would probably prefer to the more elaborate efforts of any less gifted accompanist. As an accompanist, indeed, he excels. Keys make no difference to him; he is equally at home in them all. He appears to seize the very spirit of the song, and wreathes delightful little figures and charming little passages round the voice, always, however, taking care to subordinate the instrumental to the vocal part.

THE EXCOMMUNICATION CASE.—The Norfolk clergyman who has been excommunicating one of the farmers in his parish has magnified his office over much. The Thirty-third Article of Religion and the Rubric directing at a certain place in the service the reading of "briefs, citations, and excommunications" have probably misled him. The article, which denounces as a "heathen and publican until he be openly reconciled by penance" that "person which by open denunciation of the Church is rightly cut off from the unity of the Church," refers to an excommunication by a competent Ecclesiastical Court, and the "excommunications" referred to in the Rubric are of the same kind. The parson of the parish is not an Ecclesiastical Court, and the most he can do by way of spiritual punishment is to deny the Sacrament to a parishioner who is an open and notorious evil liver. If further proof were wanting of the futility of this fulmination, it is supplied by the statute 53 Geo. III., c. 127, which substitutes the writ de contumace capiendo, about which there was so much discussion some years ago, for the writ de excommunicato capiendo, and which provides that "excommunication shall in all cases, save in those hereinafter provided, be discontinued." The cases thereinafter provided are "Ecclesiastical Courts pronouncing persons excommunicate on definitive sentence." The touch of humour introduced by the farmer's belief that all this ado must in some way be connected with the parson's tithes does not redeem the proceeding from unseemliness.—Law Journal.

A DELUGE OF COPPER.

(From a Correspondent of the Times, August 26.)

Copper at £43 10s. per ton is a paradox which the oldest member of the trade is puzzled to explain. It is one of the "frightful examples" of depression, and as such will, no doubt, come very prominently under the notice of Lord Iddesleigh's commission. Over-production, which is now the bête noir of all our staple industries, has been especially hard on copper. In the past five or six years there has been a general outbreak of new supplies in all parts of the world, notably in the far West, where Arizona and Montana threaten to eclipse the fabulous copper mines of Lake Superior. The copper industry of America, though yet in its infancy, is one of the most gigantic developments now claiming the attention of the political economist and the man of business. Its significance is great both for the regions in which it is carried on and for the general commerce of the world. It raised Michigan from a half-populated lumber field into a prosperous and wealthy State. It has given to Arizona the progress of half a century condensed into a few years. It is now breaking for Montana her bonds of ice, and bringing her rapidly to the front as a mineral producer. It is rapidly overtaking gold and silver as a source of national wealth for the Americans. Even at prices so low that they have no parallel in history, its annual product is valued at more than half that of the gold, and more than one-third that of the silver raised in the States. In dividends earned and paid it takes the lead of both. Up to the end of 1884 the total amount paid in dividends by American gold-mining companies was about 16½ million dollars, by silver-mining companies fully 14 million dollars, and by silver and lead mining companies over 14½ million dollars. The aggregate of the copper-mining dividends to the same date exceeded 34½ million dollars. Though they have now dropped to about two million dollars per annum we cannot close our eyes to the vast possibility they contain of future expansion. Copper, in short, is one of the great coming questions of American industry, and through it of international trade.

Twenty years ago America revolutionised the wheat market of the world. Ten years ago her silver mines began to demonetize silver, and the furthest-seeing prophet confesses himself puzzled to anticipate where the process may end. Now the Americans are about to force on the Old World a life and death struggle with regard to copper. While their competition was still in its infancy the copper market had begun to feel the pressure of over-production. Cornwall had been swamped by Australia. Australia, in its turn, had been overpowered by Chili. Next came the gigantic mines of the Spanish Peninsula, threatening to throw "Chili charters" into the shade. During the early part of that struggle America was one of the main supports of the market, consuming considerably more than she produced. With the development of her Lake Superior mines, however, she swung round from the position of a leading consumer to that of a first-class producer. When on the back of that she brought into the field her new copper mines in Montana and Arizona, all pre-existing calculations were utterly upset. The copper market had to find a new level in accordance with the vast supplies which were being rushed into it both from the Old World and from the New. Ages now seem to separate it from the time when £140 per ton was a not uncommon quotation for sheet copper, and £120 was considered a fair working average. Ten or a dozen years later, when Wallaroo dropped into the "nineties," there was serious alarm among mining shareholders in Australia. Yet a little later, when the market found itself under the control of Chili bars at £70 per ton, times were considered very bad indeed. It is difficult to realise that only three years ago such a price was being dolefully grumbled at as ruinously low. During the past summer smelters have more than once been glad to get in the neighbourhood of £43 per ton. Whether or not copper touched bottom then would be as hazardous to affirm as when miners were declaring that it did not pay to produce at double the price.

In the course of half a generation the copper market has collapsed as absolutely and completely as silver did, and by precisely the same process. In that short period the marketable supply has increased more rapidly than in the whole previous history of copper-mining. The copper production of the world, which is estimated to-day at from 200,000 to 220,000 tons per annum, was so recently as 1880 calculated at 120,000 tons per annum; in 1870 it was little more than 80,000 tons; and in 1850 it was between 40,000 and 50,000 tons. This enormous increase of supply has come mainly from new sources which were quite unknown and unsuspected a generation ago. They have sprung into operation one after another like thrilling situations in a melodrama, and each has been a greater puzzle than its predecessor. The sweet simplicity of copper-broking as it was carried on a few years ago has been transformed into a bewildering maze of brands and grades and geographical distinctions. Swansea could then have counted on the fingers of one hand the various localities from which it drew its raw material. Now there are more than 20 separate and distinct copper-producing countries, most of which exercise more or less influence over the European market. From Algiers on the Mediterranean to Chili and Peru on the Pacific Ocean, from Norway to the Antipodes, and from Canada to Japan, there has been an epidemic of copper mines. Some countries, it is true, cut a very small figure in the list, but they can all flatter themselves on having great possibilities. There is a delightful uncertainty attending every one of them, and where we have only a few hundred tons this year we may next year find thousands. The detailed estimate of H. R. Merton and Co., of London, shows that there are at least a dozen countries which produce more than 1000 tons of copper per annum. At the head of the list stands the United States, with an aggregate for 1884 of 63,950 tons. It has more than doubled its production in three years, and in five years has very nearly trebled it, its aggregate in 1879 having been only 23,350 tons. For second place Spain and Chili run each other very hard. Last year the total yield of the Spanish mines was close on 41,000 tons, while Chili produced a few hundred tons over the 41,000. It is very probable that the current year will reverse their relative positions, as the Chili production has for some time been virtually stationary, while that of the Peninsula continues to make rapid progress. Two years ago it was only about 36,000 tons, and not till 1879 did it pass 30,000 tons.

A few years ago Australia ranked among the leading sources of supply, but her position is now being challenged by some keen competitors. Since 1880 Germany has got ahead of her, but the contest between them is still close. Last year the yield of the German mines was estimated at 14,780 tons, against 13,300 tons for the whole output of Australia. No other secondary supply approaches these large totals, but there are several ranging from 4000 to 6000 tons per annum. Japan is credited with 6000 tons—a very significant fact in view of her proximity to India, which has hitherto been one of our best copper markets. Copper-mining is probably no infant industry among the Japanese, but it seems to have of late received a special stimulus. Till about four years ago its annual production was estimated at 1900 tons; consequently, in the interval it must have been more than trebled. At the same rate of growth Japan should soon be able to meet all the requirements not merely of India but of the Far East. The Cape of Good Hope shows a very steady production of about 5000 tons per annum, raised chiefly, if not wholly, by one company. The wide distribution of copper is strikingly illustrated by the circumstance of its being worked in nearly all the principal European States. The German and Spanish mines have been already referred to. Those of Russia, though less known, have some statistical importance, as their yield is believed to have increased to the substantial amount of 4000 tons per annum. The mines of Norway and Sweden make up between them nearly 3400 tons a year. Those of Portugal yield nearly 3000 tons, and last year they had the distinction of beating Cornwall, the annual output of which is becoming small by degrees and beautifully less. In 1881 it reached very nearly 4000 tons, but in 1883 it shrank to about 3000, and last year it is supposed to have been not more than 2500 tons. Italy is only a third-rate producer, and does not seem to be advancing, its aggregate having declined from 1600 tons in 1883 to 1325 tons last year. Austria and Hungary are both very nominal producers, their aggregate falling short of 1000 tons per annum. These third and fourth rate sources of supply on the Continent have very little influence on the copper market, the whole product being, as a rule, retained for home consumption. Germany, too, is for the most part a self-consumer. Of European mines the Spanish and Portuguese alone directly affect the international market, with which we are now dealing.

When we turn to South America a new vista of yet untested and ungauged possibilities opens out before us. The presumption is that the southern half of the continent will prove to be as rich in minerals as the northern half is already known to be. As regards Mexico, that is no matter of hypothesis—though, strangely enough, very little copper has as yet been found among the subterranean wealth of the Incas. Her production appears not to have reached 500 tons in any recent year, and last year, so far as can be ascertained, it fell short of 300 tons. But some of her smaller neighbours are beginning to show cupriferous developments of high promise. Venezuela is making herself very widely, if not favourably, known in Europe through her gold mines, and she possesses at least one copper mine of first-class importance—the New Quebrada. It contributed last year to the copper supply of the world no less than 4600 tons, very nearly half the production of the Tharsis mines in the same period. Bolivia is also to be reckoned among copper producers, though during the past two years low prices have obliged it to contract its operations severely. From a yield of nearly 3800 in 1882, it dropped last year to less than one-half.

In any attempt to forecast the future of the copper market, one of the first circumstances to attract attention is the geographical distribution of the commodity. That has undergone a marked change in the past few years, and it may draw after it a corresponding change in the distributing centres. At present London and Swansea are beyond dispute the copper markets of the world. Last year more than half of the total amount raised was handled in these markets. They drew the raw material in various forms from Spain, from Australia, from Chili, and latterly even from Arizona and Montana. But when this course of trade was established Swansea was the most accessible centre for all the leading copper mines. That is no longer true of a considerable portion of them. It is not correct, for instance, of the United States mines, nor of those in Central America. It remains true of Chili and Peru only, because the Americans have not yet entered seriously into competition with us on the Pacific coast. They are now feeling their way from San Francisco, but for a year or two longer they will have an uphill fight until the Isthmus of Panama is cut for them. Then they will have both coasts of South American at their feet, and Swansea will have to contest with Baltimore every ton of copper exported from Chili or Peru. The Americans will see their opportunity of, so to speak, "capturing" the greater part of the production of their own continent. They will apply a Monroe doctrine of a practical kind to copper. If by so doing they get into their hands a large share of the total produce of the world, they will certainly be able to compete with us for the control of the market; it may be even to take it from us. This is so important a consideration as regards our commercial future that it deserves further looking into.

It is evident that the centre of trade which can attract the largest share of the annual out-turn of a given commodity must in the end become its controlling market. In virtue of that law, London and Swansea now control the copper trade of the world, for, as has been said, they have the handling of more than one-half of the total production. Last year the imports into this country, chiefly to these two ports, were equal to 113,000 tons of fine copper. This, added to the Cornish production of, say, 2500 tons, makes 115,500 tons distributed through the British market. Taking the aggregate production of the world at 210,000 tons, it would be about 55 per cent. If, however, the whole of the American production had been retained at home, it would have amounted to more than 112,000 tons, of which nearly 64,000 would have belonged to the United States, and the remainder to South America. Young as its copper industry is, America has thus already within its grasp a good half of the world's output. It has, moreover, the chances of the future largely on its side. New copper fields may, of course, be discovered in Europe or in Asia, or in Africa; but, failing them, the growth of production in the old world must be relatively slow. In America there is a certainty that enormous deposits of copper are yet untouched, and that the fields already open are capable of indefinite development. Taking a very moderate estimate of the probabilities of the case, the time may not be far distant when the copper production of the American continent will greatly exceed that of the rest of the world. If this anticipation be realised, and it seems comparatively near, the centre of gravity of the copper markets will be transferred across the Atlantic. Placed under American control, it will have American methods of business applied to it, which in some material respects are very different from our own methods. To mention only one instance. There is a powerful institution in the States bearing the concise but rather mysterious name of "a pool." It has by degrees insinuated itself into nearly every leading department of American industry and commerce. Railway pools, coal pools, iron pools, and mining pools are familiar phrases in the everyday life of the States. Even copper pools are not altogether a novelty. More than one attempt has been made to acclimatise them on the shore of Lake Superior; and there is, in fact, a very peculiar pool now in the last throes of a disturbed existence. Two years ago the Lake Superior companies had to take seriously in hand the problem of over-production. In 1882 there had been raised in the United States 88,000,000lb. of fine copper, while the home consumption was only 77,000,000lb. and the export less than 5,000,000lb., leaving 6,000,000lb. surplus in the year. In 1883 the total production was 113,000,000lb., and the home consumption only 80,000,000lb. The copper companies were threatened with a surplus on the year of over 30,000,000lb., and a special outlet had to be sought for it abroad. They entered into contracts in Europe, particularly in France, for very heavy sales at lower rates than they were obtaining in their own market. Last year their output increased by another 25,000,000lb., raising the total to nearly 140,000,000lb. Meanwhile the home consumption declined by 10,000,000lb.—that is, to 70,000,000lb. Including the surplus stocks of preceding years, there was now between 80,000,000lb. and 90,000,000lb. to dispose of abroad. The special contracts placed in France and elsewhere were enlarged to suit the requirements of the case, without much regard to price. Towards the close of the year forward sales were being made as low as 11 cents and 10½ cents per pound. By this means the American companies relieved the dangerous glut that was overwhelming them to the extent of nearly 80,000,000lb., but they did so at the expense of the European market, and with the result of utterly demoralising it.

The above operations were distinctively American. They were planned on American lines, and carried out with American energy. The Lake Superior companies, numbering about a score, formed a pool, under the direction of the famous Calumet and Hecla, and on the principle of each putting in a certain ratio of its production. The sale of the pool copper was left absolutely to the Calumet and Hecla, which seems to have entered into some most peculiar contracts. In one case it sold several thousand tons to a speculative group in France at a sliding scale price of £4 per ton over the average Chili bars during the month of delivery. Chili bars are well known to be a decidedly speculative article. It is not difficult to put the price of them either up or down, as bold operators may find it convenient. The French speculators who had bought this Lake Superior copper were obviously under a strong temptation to depress the standard by which it was to be paid for. It had very probably been part of their original scheme to knock down Chili bars and take a two-handed profit—one out of Chili, in buying it back at a lower level, and the other out of Lake Superior, in settling with the pool at an artificially reduced price. In March, when Chili bars touched £43 per ton, the equivalent payable to the Lake Superior pool was a shade under 10 cents per pound. Some of the minor companies began to kick when they saw how the European market was being cleverly worked against them. At last the Quincy people took the bull by the horns, and refused any longer to furnish their portion of copper for the French contracts. The Calumet and Hecla appealed to the Courts to enforce the terms of the pool, but failed on the ground of pools being contrary to the public interest. Thereupon the Quincy and several, if not all, of the other companies left the Calumet and Hecla to carry its French contracts on its own shoulders. It is understood to have carried them out, and it is even said to have entered into new forward sales of a similar kind. While it was shipping its surplus copper to France at 10 cents per lb. its competitors were finding a ready sale for their copper in the States at from 11 to 11½ cents per lb.

Presumably the Lake Superior companies will be more careful in their future dealings with French speculators, but pools of one kind or another are sure to be heard of again among them. They may, indeed, be attempted on a considerably larger scale should the increase of American production force the American companies into some such measure of self-protection. Restricted production has become a recognised principle of all the great industries whose markets are liable to periodical gluts. We have it practised openly in Cleveland and indirectly in Lancashire. In the United States it is a custom reduced almost to a science. When the American copper market reaches the point of a hopeless glut, to which it is rapidly progressing, systematic restriction will be applied to it, either in the form of pooling or something else. Copper offers exceptional facilities for such tactics. The bulk of it is raised by large producers, who, both on Lake Superior, on Montana, and in Arizona, are comparatively few in number. A moderate-sized room in New York would hold representatives of all the copper mines in the States which have any influence to speak of on the market. In the Lake Superior group there are only ten which have an output of more than 1,000,000lb. per annum. Montana and Arizona may have half-a-dozen each of corresponding rank. But if double that number of men had to be admitted, it would still be a manageable pool. Whatever is practicable in pooling the Americans may be counted on to do sooner or later, and in this case sooner rather than later. If the centre of gravity of the copper market should, as we have conjectured, swing round to the other side of the Atlantic, a result which can be safely predicted is that it will soon become a severely manipulated market. A pool to include all the leading producers of both the Old World and the New is by no means a Utopian dream. It is a practicable scheme which a dozen resolute men could carry out without much difficulty if they were to set their minds on it. Investors in copper shares may find some comfort in that reflection when day after day they read of Chili bars being flat at £43 10s. per ton. A small degree of the financial strategy which distinguishes the Americans could put them up to a very different figure. Perhaps before the current year closes we may hear of combinations on the other side directed towards a forced revival of copper.
